> Complete the last lesson of chapter 771: I can say why I like or dislike a dish: its taste, whether it is hot, salty or raw, and how it smells.

771.1 el sabor — the taste, the flavour

Before the new one: say the Spanish for the butcher's, then the Spanish for the greengrocer's.

You'll want to know: el sabor

el sabor — "the taste, the flavour".

Me gusta por el sabor, no por el precio.

I like it for the taste, not the price.

¿De qué sabor? — which flavour? Saber a is to taste of: Sabe a limón.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

sabor is inherited from Latin sapōrem, from sapor 'a taste, a flavour' (EtymDB), built on sapere 'to taste', the verb behind saber.

What you've built

One more word for telling, explaining and describing at B1.

Your turn

- Say it: el sabor
- Say it: el sabor, once more
- Say it: a sentence of your own with el sabor
- Recall: say the Spanish for the butcher's, then the Spanish for the greengrocer's, then say el sabor again

Before you move on

What does el sabor mean? ("The taste, the flavour".) Say it once more.

771.2 picante — spicy, hot

Before the new one: say the Spanish for the greengrocer's, then the Spanish for the taste.

You'll want to know: picante

picante — "spicy, hot".

No lo como porque es demasiado picante.

I don't eat it because it is too spicy.

Picante is spicy-hot; hot in temperature is caliente.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

picante is built on picar 'to sting, to prick'. Picar is usually traced to spoken Latin pīccāre* 'to sting, to strike', the form EtymDB gives for its French cousin piquer. Spicy food stings the tongue.

What you've built

One more word for telling, explaining and describing at B1.

Your turn

- Say it: picante
- Say it: picante, once more
- Say it: a sentence of your own with picante
- Recall: say the Spanish for the greengrocer's, then the Spanish for the taste, then say picante again

Before you move on

What does picante mean? ("Spicy, hot".) Say it once more.

771.3 salado — salty; savoury

Before the new one: say the Spanish for the taste, then the Spanish for spicy.

You'll want to know: salado

salado — "salty; savoury".

No me gusta la sopa porque está muy salada.

I don't like the soup because it is very salty.

In Spain salado can also mean witty or charming; in parts of Latin America, unlucky.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins salado is built on the participle of salar 'to salt', from sal, which is inherited from Latin sāl 'salt' (Lewis & Short).

What you've built

One more word for telling, explaining and describing at B1.

Your turn

- Say it: salado

> Complete the last lesson of chapter 776: I can say what to do if something goes wrong on a computer: a password, a file, a folder, an update or a keyboard.

776.1 la contraseña — the password

Before the new one: say the Spanish for the piece, then the Spanish for the smell.

You'll want to know: la contraseña

la contraseña — "the password".

Si olvidas la contraseña, pulsa aquí.

If you forget your password, click here.

La clave is also used, especially for a PIN.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

contraseña is built on contra 'against, in return' and seña 'a sign', which comes from Latin signa, the plural of signum 'a mark' (Lewis & Short). It was first a soldier's countersign.

What you've built

One more word for telling, explaining and describing at B1.

Your turn

- Say it: la contraseña
- Say it: la contraseña, once more
- Say it: a sentence of your own with la contraseña
- Recall: say the Spanish for the piece, then the Spanish for the smell, then say la contraseña again

Before you move on

What does la contraseña mean? ("The password".) Say it once more.

776.2 el archivo — the file; the archive

Before the new one: say the Spanish for the smell, then the Spanish for the password.

You'll want to know: el archivo

el archivo — "the file; the archive".

Si el archivo es muy grande, no se puede enviar.

If the file is very big, it can't be sent.

Un archivo adjunto — an attachment.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

archivo is a learned borrowing from Late Latin archīvum 'the archives' (Lewis & Short), which comes from Greek archeîon 'a town hall' (EtymDB).

What you've built

One more word for telling, explaining and describing at B1.

Your turn

- Say it: el archivo
- Say it: el archivo, once more
- Say it: a sentence of your own with el archivo
- Recall: say the Spanish for the smell, then the Spanish for the password, then say el archivo again

Before you move on

What does el archivo mean? ("The file; the archive".) Say it once more.

776.3 la carpeta — the folder

Before the new one: say the Spanish for the password, then the Spanish for the file.

You'll want to know: la carpeta

la carpeta — "the folder".

Si no encuentras la foto, mira en esta carpeta.

If you can't find the photo, look in this folder.

Also a cardboard folder for papers.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

carpeta was borrowed from French carpette (EtymDB), a cloth cover for a table, which goes back to Medieval Latin carpīta. The cover for papers became a folder.

What you've built

One more word for telling, explaining and describing at B1.

Your turn

- Say it: la carpeta
- Say it: la carpeta, once more
- Say it: a sentence of your own with la carpeta
- Recall: say the Spanish for the password, then the Spanish for the file, then say la carpeta again

Before you move on

What does la carpeta mean? ("The folder".) Say it once more.

776.4 actualizar — to update

Before the new one: say the Spanish for the file, then the Spanish for the folder.

You'll want to know: actualizar

actualizar — "to update".

Si no funciona, actualiza la aplicación.

If it doesn't work, update the app.

It takes c before e: actualicé. La actualización is the update.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins actualizar is built on actual 'current' with the ending -izar. Actual comes from Latin āctuālis 'active, practical' (EtymDB; Lewis & Short), from agere 'to do'. In Spanish actual means current, not real.

What you've built

One more word for telling, explaining and describing at B1.

Your turn

- Say it: actualizar
- Say it: actualizar, once more
- Say it: a sentence of your own with actualizar
- Recall: say the Spanish for the file, then the Spanish for the folder, then say actualizar again

Before you move on

What does actualizar mean? ("To update".) Say it once more.

776.5 el teclado — the keyboard

Before the new one: say the Spanish for the folder, then the Spanish for to update.

You'll want to know: el teclado

el teclado — "the keyboard".

Si el teclado no funciona, prueba con otro.

If the keyboard doesn't work, try another one.

Una tecla is a key.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

teclado is built on tecla 'a key' with the ending -ado (EtymDB). The origin of tecla itself is not settled.

What you've built

One more word for telling, explaining and describing at B1.

Your turn

- Say it: el teclado
- Say it: el teclado, once more
- Say it: a sentence of your own with el teclado
- Recall: say the Spanish for the folder, then the Spanish for to update, then say el teclado again

Before you move on

What does el teclado mean? ("The keyboard".) Say it once more.

Chapter 777

Si se va la luz

> Complete the last lesson of chapter 777: I can say what to do if the power goes or food goes off: freeze it, let it cool, iron later, plug in and restart.

777.1 congelar — to freeze

Before the new one: say the Spanish for to update, then the Spanish for the keyboard.

You'll want to know: congelar

congelar — "to freeze".

> Si no vas a comerlo hoy, congélalo.
>
> If you aren't going to eat it today, freeze it.

Congelado — frozen. Los congelados — frozen food.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

congelar is a learned borrowing from Latin congelāre 'to cause to freeze' (EtymDB), built on gelū 'frost', the word that gave hielo.

What you've built

One more word for telling, explaining and describing at B1.

Your turn

- Say it: congelar
- Say it: congelar, once more
- Say it: a sentence of your own with congelar
- Recall: say the Spanish for to update, then the Spanish for the keyboard, then say congelar again

Before you move on

What does congelar mean? ("To freeze".) Say it once more.

777.2 enfriar — to cool, to chill

Before the new one: say the Spanish for the keyboard, then the Spanish for to freeze.

You'll want to know: enfriar

enfriar — "to cool, to chill".

Si la sopa está muy caliente, déjala enfriar.

If the soup is very hot, let it cool.

It takes an accent: enfrío. Enfriarse is to cool down, and also to catch a cold.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

enfriar is built on frío 'cold' with en- and -ar. Frío is inherited from Latin frīgidus 'cold' (Lewis & Short).

What you've built

One more word for telling, explaining and describing at B1.

Your turn

- Say it: enfriar
- Say it: enfriar, once more
- Say it: a sentence of your own with enfriar
- Recall: say the Spanish for the keyboard, then the Spanish for to freeze, then say enfriar again

Before you move on

What does enfriar mean? ("To cool, to chill".) Say it once more.

777.3 planchar — to iron

Before the new one: say the Spanish for to freeze, then the Spanish for to cool.

You'll want to know: planchar

planchar — "to iron".

Si tienes tiempo, plancha la camisa.

If you have time, iron the shirt.

La plancha is the iron; a la plancha is grilled on a hot plate.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

planchar is built on plancha 'a flat iron plate', which comes from French planche 'a board' (EtymDB), from Latin planca 'a plank' (Lewis & Short).

What you've built

One more word for telling, explaining and describing at B1.

Your turn

- Say it: planchar
- Say it: planchar, once more
- Say it: a sentence of your own with planchar
- Recall: say the Spanish for to freeze, then the Spanish for to cool, then say planchar again

Before you move on

What does planchar mean? ("To iron".) Say it once more.

777.4 enchufar — to plug in

Before the new one: say the Spanish for to cool, then the Spanish for to iron.

You'll want to know: enchufar

enchufar — "to plug in".

Si no carga, enchufa el cable otra vez.

If it isn't charging, plug the cable in again.

El enchufe is the plug or socket; in Spain it also means connections, knowing the right people.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

The origin of enchufar is not settled. It is usually treated as imitative, built on a sound like chuf, the noise of one pipe pushed into another.

What you've built

One more word for telling, explaining and describing at B1.

Your turn

- Say it: enchufar
- Say it: enchufar, once more
- Say it: a sentence of your own with enchufar
- Recall: say the Spanish for to cool, then the Spanish for to iron, then say enchufar again

Before you move on

What does enchufar mean? ("To plug in".) Say it once more.

777.5 reiniciar — to restart, to reboot

Before the new one: say the Spanish for to iron, then the Spanish for to plug in.

You'll want to know: reiniciar

reiniciar — "to restart, to reboot".

Si se bloquea, reinicia el móvil.

If it freezes, restart your phone.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

reiniciar is built on iniciar with re- 'again'. Iniciar is a learned borrowing from Latin initiāre 'to begin', from initium 'a beginning' (Lewis & Short).

What you've built

One more word for telling, explaining and describing at B1.

Your turn

- Say it: reiniciar
- Say it: reiniciar, once more

- Say it: a sentence of your own with reiniciar
- Recall: say the Spanish for to iron, then the Spanish for to plug in, then say reiniciar again

Before you move on

What does reiniciar mean? ("To restart, to reboot".) Say it once more.

777.6 Más cosas de cada día

Say the Spanish for the password and the file.

Your turn

Say these aloud:

- the password, the file, the folder, to update, the keyboard
- to freeze, to cool, to iron, to plug in, to restart

Before you move on

The password? (la contraseña.) The file? (el archivo.) The folder? (la carpeta.) To update? (actualizar.) The keyboard? (el teclado.) To freeze? (congelar.) To cool? (enfriar.) To iron? (planchar.) To plug in? (enchufar.) To restart? (reiniciar.)

777.7 Si se va la luz — once more

Say the Spanish for to freeze and to cool.

Your turn

- Say it: to freeze, to cool, to iron, to plug in, to restart

Before you move on

To freeze? (congelar.) To cool? (enfriar.) To iron? (planchar.) To plug in? (enchufar.) To restart? (reiniciar.)

Pronunciation — a reference, not a chapter

This is a reference, not a chapter. You are not meant to read it front to back before starting. Each lesson tells you the one or two sounds you need for that word, and links here if you want the fuller picture. Look things up as curiosity strikes; otherwise, keep learning words.

Each entry has an id (e.g. `silent-h`) that lessons cite in their front-matter `sounds:` field, so "Sounds you'll need" notes and this page stay in sync.

Vowels — the five pure sounds

Spanish has exactly five vowel sounds, one per letter, every time. English has a dozen-plus and reuses letters for several; that habit is the thing to unlearn.

- `vowel-a` — a as in English father. Always. Never cat, never cake.
- `vowel-e` — e as in bed. Always. Never the ee of see.
- `vowel-i` — i as the ee in see (not the English i of sit). The single most common vowel mistake English speakers make.
- `vowel-o` — o as in note, but short and clean, with no w-glide at the end.
- `vowel-u` — u as the oo in food. Always.

Diphthongs — two vowels run together

- `diphthong-ue` — ue as a quick weh (Spanish u + e), e.g. bueno, nueve.

- `diphthong-ie` — ie as a quick yeh (Spanish i + e), e.g. quiero, siete.
- `diphthong-ei` — ei as in English they, e.g. seis, treinta.

Consonants that differ from English

- `silent-h` — h is always silent, no exceptions. hola is OH-la, hay is eye.
- `soft-c` — c before e or i is a soft sound: s in Latin America, a th (as in think) in most of Spain. gracias, cero. Before a/o/u it's a hard k (casa).
- `qu-k` — qu is a hard k, and the u is silent: quiero is KYEH-ro, qué is keh. (This silent-u-after-q is inherited straight from Latin.)
- `ll-y` — ll sounds like English y in yes across most of Latin America: llamo is YA-mo. (Regional variation exists; y is the safe default.)
- `n-tilde` — ñ is the ny of canyon: español is es-pa-NYOL. A different letter from n, not a decoration.
- `rr-trill` — rr is a rolled/trilled r; a single r between vowels is a light tap. pero (but) vs. perro (dog) is a real minimal pair.
- `j-h` — j is a throat-h, rougher than English h (like the ch in Scottish loch): jueves.
- `g-soft` — g before e/i is the same throat sound as j (gente); before a/o/u it's a hard g (gato).
- `d-soft` — d between vowels softens toward English th in this: nada is closer to NA-tha.
- `v-b` — v and b sound essentially identical in Spanish, both a soft b.

Stress & written accents

Three facts cover almost every word:

- `stress-default-vowel-ns` — a word ending in a vowel, n, or s is stressed on the second-to-last syllable: ca-SA, ha-BLAN, li-BROS.

- `stress-default-consonant` — a word ending in any other consonant is stressed on the last syllable: ha-BLAR, ciu-DAD.
- `accent-mark` — a written accent (´) overrides both rules and puts the stress exactly on the marked vowel: ha-BLÓ, DÍ-as. The mark can also distinguish otherwise-identical words (qué "what?" vs. que "that", tú "you" vs. tu "your").
- `accent-i` — a specific case of the above: the accent on í in words like días keeps the stress on the i where the default rule would otherwise misplace it.

Punctuation

- `inverted-marks` — questions and exclamations open with an inverted mark: ¿cómo estás?, ¡hola! — so you know the intonation before you reach the end of the sentence.

Introduced in Chapter 555.

anhelar
to yearn for, to long for Introduced in Chapter 765.

animar
to cheer up, to encourage Introduced in Chapter 712.

anoche
last night — Latin ad noctem, toward night, worn into one word; the same noctem gives English nocturnal and equinox Introduced in Chapter 322.

anochecer
to get dark; nightfall
Introduced in Chapter 703.

añorar
to long for, to yearn for Introduced in Chapter 709.

anotar
to note down — Latin nota on a verb, and the quieter twin of apuntar Introduced in Chapter 465.

anteayer
the day before yesterday
Introduced in Chapter 537.

anteriormente
previously, earlier
Introduced in Chapter 538.

antes
before — Latin ante; English ante-, antique, ancient and ancestor all come off it, and an ancestor is one who went before Introduced in Chapter 323.

anticipar
to bring forward; to anticipate
Introduced in Chapter 616.

antiguamente
in the old days, formerly Introduced in Chapter 575.

antiguo
old, ancient; former
Introduced in Chapter 575.

antipático unpleasant, disagreeable — simpático with the Greek anti- fastened on the front; the two words are a matched pair and neither means what its English lookalike means Introduced in Chapter 423.

anual

Introduced in Chapter 449.

arreglarse
to get ready, to get dressed up
Introduced in Chapter 494.

arrepentirse
to regret — a verb that looks like it contains sentir, behaves like sentir, and is not related to it Introduced in Chapter 443.

arrestar
to arrest
Introduced in Chapter 519.

arriba
up, above, upstairs — Latin ripa, a riverbank; English river, riparian and arrive all come off the same bank Introduced in Chapter 341.

arriesgado
risky, daring
Introduced in Chapter 530.

arriesgar
to risk
Introduced in Chapter 614.

ascender
to be promoted; to rise Introduced in Chapter 595.

asegurar
to assure, to insist; to insure Introduced in Chapter 516.

así
thus, like this, that way — Latin ad sic, to thus; the same sic that Spanish turned into sí and that English still writes inside a quotation Introduced in Chapter 328.

así que
thus, in that way — and with que after it, "so"; built on the same sīc that gave you sí Introduced in Chapter 175.

bajar
to go down, to come down; to lower Introduced in Chapter 494.

bañarse
to have a swim; to have a bath
Introduced in Chapter 690.

barato
cheap — from the old verb baratar, to trade or haggle; Corominas calls the ultimate origin uncertain, probably pre-Roman and possibly Celtic, and English barter is very likely the same family Introduced in Chapter 397.

barrer
to sweep
Introduced in Chapter 485.

bastante
enough, quite — an ending you already decode, on a verb meaning to suffice, giving a word that means exactly “sufficing” Introduced in Chapter 227.

batir
to beat, to whisk
Introduced in Chapter 768.

be larga o be corta
the letters with more than one name — which matters because b and v sound identical in Spanish, so the name is how a speaker tells them apart Introduced in Chapter 425.

beber
to drink (another -er verb — cementing the pattern)
Introduced in Chapter 36.

besar
to kiss
Introduced in Chapter 715.

bien

Introduced in Chapter 1.

bienvenido
welcome — bien plus venido, well come, two pieces you already own Introduced in Chapter 282.

billete
ticket
Introduced in Chapter 268.

bonito
pretty — bueno with a real diminutive on it, "nice and good"; and Latin bellus, which gave bello and English beautiful, had already been made the same way out of the same bonus Introduced in Chapter 399.

bordear
to go along the edge of, to skirt
Introduced in Chapter 673.

borrar
to erase — from borra, coarse wool, the pad that rubbed writing out; English borrow is no relation Introduced in Chapter 388.

Introduced in Chapter 401.

caminar
to walk — built on a Celtic word for a path, beside andar, whose own past is unsettled Introduced in Chapter 165.

cancelar
to cancel
Introduced in Chapter 479.

cansado
tired — a state, not a quality, which is why it takes estar and never ser Introduced in Chapter 59.

cariñoso
affectionate, loving Introduced in Chapter 714.

expensive — Latin cārus already meant both dear-and-beloved and dear-and-costly, exactly as English dear still does, and charity, cherish and caress all come from it Introduced in Chapter 397.

charlar
to chat
Introduced in Chapter 502.

chocar
to crash, to collide
Introduced in Chapter 527.

cien
a hundred — Latin centum, cut short before a noun; English cent, century and percent keep the Latin, and English hundred is the very same ancient word Introduced in Chapter 351.

cierto
true — Latin certus, sifted: what is left after you separate it out Introduced in Chapter 284.

circular
to circulate, to drive (of traffic)

Introduced in Chapter 614.

gastar
to spend — Latin vastare, to lay waste; devastate is the clean cousin, and the w in English waste is a Germanic fingerprint Introduced in Chapter 386.

gato
cat — a word that travelled out of Africa with the animal, pushing Latin's own fēlēs aside Introduced in Chapter 150.

generar
to generate, to create
Introduced in Chapter 583.

generoso
generous
Introduced in Chapter 723.

gestionar
to manage, to handle
Introduced in Chapter 594.

girar
to turn — Latin gyrare, from Greek gyros, a circle; a late arrival taken from books rather than inherited from speech Introduced in Chapter 387.

gordo
fat — Latin gurdus, dull or blunt, which Quintilian says he heard came into Latin from Spain; French gourd, numb, is the survivor, and English gourd is a false friend Introduced in Chapter 371.

gotear
to drip, to leak
Introduced in Chapter 769.

grabar
to record; to engrave
Introduced in Chapter 761.

gracias
thank you

grande
big — the first word in this book for what something is like, and it does not change for gender Introduced in Chapter 58.

granizar
to hail
Introduced in Chapter 699.

gratis
free of charge — a whole Latin word swallowed unchanged, grātīs contracted from grātiīs, "for thanks", which is why it never grows an -o or an -a Introduced in Chapter 397.

gratuito
free of charge
Introduced in Chapter 633.

gris
grey — a Germanic word borrowed into Spanish through its Romance neighbours; English grey is a cousin from a different Germanic stem, not the same word Introduced in Chapter 372.

gritar
to shout — Latin quiritare, to cry out; English cry is the same word, and only English moved it from shouting to weeping Introduced in Chapter 388.

grosero
rude, coarse
Introduced in Chapter 727.

grueso
thick — Late Latin grossus, coarse; English gross is the same word, and so is grocer, a dealer who sold in bulk Introduced in Chapter 379.

guapo
good-looking — the Academy derives it from Latin vappa, flat wine and so a good-for-nothing, but Corominas argues against that route, so this is a word whose origin the two standard authorities do not agree on Introduced in Chapter 399.

guardar
to keep — Germanic wardon, to watch over; the w- became gu- in Spanish, which is why ward and guard are the same word twice Introduced in Chapter 383.

guiñar
to wink
Introduced in Chapter 718.

gustar
to please — the verb English calls “to like”, built the other way round Introduced in Chapter 163.

hábil
skilful, clever
Introduced in Chapter 728.

habitación
room
Introduced in Chapter 268.

habitual usual, regular — what you hold on to, from the haber you already have

Introduced in Chapter 252.

huir
to flee, to run away
Introduced in Chapter 518.

húmedo
humid, damp
Introduced in Chapter 696.

humilde
humble; poor
Introduced in Chapter 726.

igual
the same, equal — Latin aequalis from aequus, level; English equal, equator and adequate are all about a surface with no tilt in it Introduced in Chapter 350.

ilegal
illegal
Introduced in Chapter 625.

ileso
unhurt, unharmed
Introduced in Chapter 527.

imaginar
to imagine
Introduced in Chapter 618.

impedir
to stop, to prevent
Introduced in Chapter 621.

importante
important — built on importar, from Latin importāre, "to carry in"; classical Latin never used it to mean "to matter", and English import still carries both jobs Introduced in Chapter 398.

importar
to matter — the verb behind importante, and it works like gustar Introduced in Chapter 463.

imprimir
to print — the verb el impreso was the participle of, handed back with its own lesson insistir to insist

Introduced in Chapter 493.

instalarse
to settle in, to move in
Introduced in Chapter 551.

inteligente
intelligent — Latin intellegere, inter "between" plus legere "to pick out"; intelligence is literally the act of choosing between things Introduced in Chapter 423.

intentar
to try
Introduced in Chapter 492.

interesante
interesting — from Latin interesse, inter + esse, “to be between”; the same phrase gave banking the word interest, because what a lender lost was id quod interest, the difference between Introduced in Chapter 398.

interesar
to interest — the verb behind an adjective you own, running on the same machine as doler Introduced in Chapter 443.

internet
the internet — English Internet, itself Latin inter, between, bolted onto Germanic net; taken into Spanish unchanged except for the beat, which moves to the last syllable Introduced in Chapter 393.

interpretar
to play (a role); to interpret
Introduced in Chapter 760.

interrumpir
to interrupt
Introduced in Chapter 480.

invertir
to invest; to reverse

Introduced in Chapter 474.

ir
to go — with the three singular present forms voy, vas, and va Introduced in Chapter 49.

jamás
never, ever — Latin iam magis, already more; the magis half is the same word that became más, and French jamais took the identical road Introduced in Chapter 328.

joven
young — Latin iuvenis; English young is the inherited cousin, juvenile and junior are the borrowed ones, and June comes in only through Juno Introduced in Chapter 371.

jubilado
retired — a participle used as a noun, the same move that made el pedido, and a surprisingly cheerful root Introduced in Chapter 435.

jubilarse
to retire — the verb behind a word you were given, and it names a shout of joy Introduced in Chapter 445.

jugar
to play — from Latin's word for joking, and the only verb in the language that breaks u to ue Introduced in Chapter 170.

juntarse
to get together; to join Introduced in Chapter 560.

junto
together, next to — one short word doing two jobs, and the preposition that decides which Introduced in Chapter 433.

Introduced in Chapter 522.

la
"it" for something feminine — the one word in this pair that never had to change
Introduced in Chapter 84.

la abeja
bee — Latin apicula, the little apis; Spanish kept the small form and let the big one die, the same way oveja and oreja did Introduced in Chapter 368.

la abuela
the grandmother — the avus root swung feminine, the same -o/-a switch as hijo and hija Introduced in Chapter 306.

la academia
academy, language school
Introduced in Chapter 410.

la acogida
the welcome, the reception
Introduced in Chapter 551.

la actividad
activity — Medieval Latin āctīvitās, a Scholastic coinage on āctīvus, from agere, to drive or to do; the -ct- still sitting intact inside activ- is the sign the word came off the page Introduced in Chapter 394.

la actriz
actress — Latin actrix, the feminine of actor; the -triz ending is a museum piece that survives in only a handful of Spanish words Introduced in Chapter 421.

la actuación
the performance
Introduced in Chapter 759.

la acuarela
watercolour
Introduced in Chapter 751.

la acusación
the accusation, the charge

la alegría
joy, happiness
Introduced in Chapter 704.

la alergia
the allergy
Introduced in Chapter 740.

la alfombra
rug, carpet — Andalusi Arabic al-ḥánbal, a kind of tapestry; the al- is the Arabic article, and a once-popular red-carpet story turned out to be a different word Introduced in Chapter 373.

la almohada
pillow — Andalusi Arabic al-mukhadda, the cheek-instrument, with the Arabic article fused on; this word has no English relative at all Introduced in Chapter 366.

la alternativa

Introduced in Chapter 434.

la belleza
beauty
Introduced in Chapter 730.

la biblioteca
library — Greek biblion, a book, plus theke, a chest, so a book-chest; the same theke gave Spanish bodega and botica, French boutique and English apothecary Introduced in Chapter 353.

la bicicleta
bicycle — French bicyclette, Latin bi- two on Greek kyklos circle, wheel; cycle, tricycle, cyclops and the 1848 coinage cyclone are the same root, English wheel is its inherited cousin, and encyclopedia comes from a misread Greek phrase Introduced in Chapter 363.

la boca
the mouth — Latin bucca was the cheek, and the cheek pushed the mouth out of the job Introduced in Chapter 286.

la bocacalle
the turning, the side-street opening Introduced in Chapter 647.

la boda
the wedding — a Latin plural that hardened into a Spanish singular, and the pieces are invisible Introduced in Chapter 440.

la bolsa
the bag — Latin bursa from Greek byrsa, a hide; English purse, bursar and reimburse are all the same leather Introduced in Chapter 311.

la botella
bottle — from French bouteille, on a late Latin buttis, a cask; a butler is the bottle-keeper, and the older Spanish form of the same word is bota Introduced in Chapter 373.

Introduced in Chapter 468.

la búsqueda
the search
Introduced in Chapter 531.

la cabeza
the head — Spanish KEPT Latin's real word, unlike French, which replaced it with slang for "pot" Introduced in Chapter 141.

la cadera
the hip
Introduced in Chapter 737.

la cafetera
the coffee maker, the coffee pot
Introduced in Chapter 775.

la caja
box — Latin capsa, the case a Roman kept scrolls in, probably reaching Castilian through Catalan or Occitan; case, capsule and chassis are cousins, and English cash first meant the box itself Introduced in Chapter 366.

la calefacción
the heating — heat-making, built from two words you already own Introduced in Chapter 444.

la calificación
the grade, as printed on a document — the formal partner of nota, and a word that says out loud what a grade is for Introduced in Chapter 429.

la calle
the street — Latin callis, the narrow track worn through rough ground by driven animals; the town's word began in the hills Introduced in Chapter 302.

la calma
the calm — Late Latin cauma from Greek kauma, burning heat; the windless noon at sea gave sailors a word for stillness Introduced in Chapter 333.

la calzada
the roadway, the carriageway
Introduced in Chapter 647.

Introduced in Chapter 351.

la capacidad
the ability, the capacity
Introduced in Chapter 598.

la cara
face — Late Latin cara, generally traced to Greek kara head though the trail is not clean; the identical cara meaning expensive is a separate root, carus, which gave English charity, caress and cherish Introduced in Chapter 364.

la caravana
the caravan, the camper; the tailback Introduced in Chapter 666.

la cárcel
the prison, the jail
Introduced in Chapter 522.

Introduced in Chapter 424.

las elecciones
the elections
Introduced in Chapter 602.

las letras voladitas
the raised letters — the little o and a that sit above the line in an ordinal or an abbreviation, and which one to use for a woman Introduced in Chapter 426.

las mayúsculas
capital letters — and the four things Spanish pointedly does not capitalise, every one of which English does Introduced in Chapter 426.

las náuseas
nausea, sickness
Introduced in Chapter 740.

las siglas
initialisms and acronyms — written without points, and pluralised by doubling the letters rather than by adding an s
Introduced in Chapter 426.

las vacaciones
the holidays — Latin vacātiō, exemption, from vacāre, to be empty or free of duty; a learned borrowing, twin of English vacation and vacant, and no relation to vaca, the cow Introduced in Chapter 392.

latir
to beat (of the heart)
Introduced in Chapter 735.

lavar
to wash — Latin lavare, which English kept in lavatory, launder and lavish Introduced in Chapter 381.

to clean
Introduced in Chapter 485.

limpio
clean — from limpidus, clear, the word English kept for water and Spanish moved to laundry Introduced in Chapter 281.

listo
clever with ser, ready with estar — one word whose meaning is decided by the verb in front of it; the RAE traces it to Gothic lists, cunning Introduced in Chapter 326.

llamo
I call (from llamar, to call)
Introduced in Chapter 4.

llegar
to arrive — Latin plicāre per Corominas, whose sense he routes through the nautical idiom applicāre nāvem, to bring a ship to shore; initial pl- gave Spanish ll- and Portuguese ch-, which is why Portuguese says chegar Introduced in Chapter 395.

llenar
to fill
Introduced in Chapter 496.

lleno
full — Latin plēnus; plenty, plenary, replenish and complete are the borrowed cousins, full is the inherited one, and comply belongs with filling rather than with folding Introduced in Chapter 365.

llorar
to cry, to weep
Introduced in Chapter 704.

llovía / llovió
the same rain in two tenses — how a story uses the imperfect for the scene and the preterite for the events Introduced in Chapter 167.

lloviznar
to drizzle
Introduced in Chapter 697.

llueve
rain refuses the hacer pattern and brings its own verb — and its ll- is the sound change you already met in llamar Introduced in Chapter 148.

to get better
Introduced in Chapter 739.

memorizar
to memorize, to learn by heart
Introduced in Chapter 764.

mencionar
to mention
Introduced in Chapter 502.

menor
smaller, younger — Latin minor, the partner of minus; Latin built minister out of minus to stand opposite magister, so mayor and menor give you master and minister as a matched pair Introduced in Chapter 397.

menos
less, fewer, except — Latin minus, the twin of magis; English minus, minor, minimum, minister and diminish are all the small end of it Introduced in Chapter 324.

mentir
to lie, to tell lies
Introduced in Chapter 636.

mentiroso
lying; the liar
Introduced in Chapter 724.

to deserve
Introduced in Chapter 636.

meter
to put in — the plainest verb of putting, and the mittere inside el permiso Introduced in Chapter 455.

mezclar
to mix — spoken Latin misculare, from miscere; English meddle and medley are its true siblings, and a medley was once a fight Introduced in Chapter 385.

mi, tu, su
my, your informal, and your formal or his or her — before a singular noun Introduced in Chapter 49.

mientras
while — Latin dum interim, “for the time between”; the inter in it is English interim, interval and international Introduced in Chapter 323.

mientras tanto
meanwhile, in the meantime
Introduced in Chapter 536.

Introduced in Chapter 448.

muerto
dead; the dead person
Introduced in Chapter 555.

multar
to fine
Introduced in Chapter 623.

muy
very — not a new word at all, but mucho with its ending bitten off, and the shape tells you what is coming next Introduced in Chapter 226.

nacer
to be born
Introduced in Chapter 497.

nada
nothing — Latin res nata, "a thing born"; the res fell away and the born thing came to mean no thing at all Introduced in Chapter 316.

nadar
to swim
Introduced in Chapter 417.

nadie
nobody — Latin nati, “born ones”, from homines nati, “people born”; the exact twin of nada, which was a thing born Introduced in Chapter 317.

narrar
to narrate, to tell
Introduced in Chapter 563.

navegar
to sail; to browse (the internet)
Introduced in Chapter 658.

necesario necessary — Latin necessarius, from necesse, unavoidable; English necessary is the same Latin word, borrowed rather than inherited Introduced in Chapter 380.

necesitar
to need — Medieval Latin necessitō, borrowed late and attested in Spanish by the seventeenth century; inside necesse the ne- is secure and the rest has resisted definitive analysis, whatever the confident dictionaries print Introduced in Chapter 395.

negativo
negative
Introduced in Chapter 584.

negociar
to negotiate
Introduced in Chapter 634.

negro, blanco
black and white — the two words, and the straight-line Latin history of the first one Introduced in Chapter 139.

nervioso
nervous — Latin nervosus from nervus, a sinew; English nerve, nervous and neuron are the same fibre, and -oso is the -ous you already know Introduced in Chapter 326.

nevar
to snow
Introduced in Chapter 700.

ni
nor, not even — the joining word for two things that are both absent, and the one place Spanish stacks negatives on purpose
Introduced in Chapter 234.

"I don't understand" — the most useful sentence a beginner owns
Introduced in Chapter 15.

no hay de qué
not at all — the reply to thanks, assembled entirely from words you already have Introduced in Chapter 283.

no sé
I do not know — saber is Latin sapere, to taste; knowing began as tasting Introduced in Chapter 303.

nos
"us" — the object pronoun that speaks for more than one person
Introduced in Chapter 88.

nublado
cloudy, overcast
Introduced in Chapter 698.

nublarse
to cloud over
Introduced in Chapter 698.

nuestro, nuestra
our — matching a known masculine or feminine singular noun Introduced in Chapter 69.

nuevo
new — Latin novus, and English new, which is the cousin rather than the loan Introduced in Chapter 281.

nunca
never — Latin numquam, ne plus umquam, "not ever"; English never is ne plus ever, the identical compound built out of Germanic parts Introduced in Chapter 316.

o
or — one letter, and one rule about what happens when the next word starts with the same sound Introduced in Chapter 233.

o sea
I mean, that is

Introduced in Chapter 624.

ofrecer
to offer — to carry something toward somebody, and the verb a shop reaches for when it cannot give you what you asked Introduced in Chapter 436.

oír
to hear — the half of listening you do not choose, and a verb that sprouts a y Introduced in Chapter 165.

oler
to smell
Introduced in Chapter 771.

olvidar
to forget — Latin oblitare, from oblivisci; English oblivion is the same word, and the trail stops there Introduced in Chapter 384.

once — quince
11-15 — five single opaque words, each one a Latin compound worn down until the seam disappeared Introduced in Chapter 149.

operar
to operate (on)
Introduced in Chapter 739.

Introduced in Chapter 669.

os
"you all" as the object — the shortest word in the set, and the one that stops at a border
Introduced in Chapter 90.

oscuro
dark — Latin obscurus, ob- plus a word for dark; English obscure is the same word, and which ancient root the second half belongs to is still argued over Introduced in Chapter 372.

otra vez
again — literally another turn; vez is Latin vicem, a turn taken in rotation Introduced in Chapter 303.

otro
another, other — Latin alter, which meant the other of a pair rather than any other at all Introduced in Chapter 317.

paciente
patient
Introduced in Chapter 503.

padecer
to suffer from
Introduced in Chapter 738.

pagar
to pay — Latin pacare, to pacify, from pax, peace; paying somebody was settling with them Introduced in Chapter 382.

pálido
pale — Latin pallidus; English pale came through French and pallid straight from the Latin, so they are the same word twice, and fallow is the inherited cousin Introduced in Chapter 372.

para
"for" pointing forward — at a destination, a purpose, a deadline, a person meant to receive something Introduced in Chapter 176.

parar
to stop
Introduced in Chapter 641.

Introduced in Chapter 461.

pensar
to think — at root "to weigh", and a stem-changer that breaks e→ie Introduced in Chapter 153.

pequeño
small — no Latin ancestor anybody can name; the dictionary of record calls it an expressive word shared across the Romance languages, and piccolo and petit are the same kind of word Introduced in Chapter 371.

percatarse
to notice, to realise
Introduced in Chapter 517.

perder
to lose — Latin perdere, to destroy or lose, inherited whole; per- is clear but the second element is disputed, either dare, to give, or a separate element meaning to put, and English perdition is the clean cognate Introduced in Chapter 395.

perderse
to get lost — the reflexive equivocarse already grouped it with, and in a class it is the thread you lose, not the way Introduced in Chapter 471.

perdón
the other sorry — "give completely" — for fault and for getting past people, where lo siento is for regret Introduced in Chapter 137.

perezoso
lazy
Introduced in Chapter 729.

Introduced in Chapter 561.

¡Felicidades!
congratulations — a plural noun used as an exclamation, and the one Spanish reaches for on a birthday where English would not Introduced in Chapter 428.

¡Salud!
cheers, and bless you — the noun you already have, used as an act rather than as a description, and it does two jobs
Introduced in Chapter 428.

¿cómo está usted?
how are you? — assemble the formal question from cómo, estar, and usted
Introduced in Chapter 8.

¿cómo se dice?
the single most useful sentence a learner owns — and it is this chapter's grammar, doing exactly what the chapter said
Introduced in Chapter 183.

¿cómo se llama usted?
what's your name? (formal)
Introduced in Chapter 6.

¿Cuántos años tienes?
how old are you? — literally, how many years do you have?

size, especially clothing size — from tallar, to cut or shape la talla
explicit focus: pronunciation, etymology; Chapter 402, p. 1909

size — Latin tam magnum, so big, welded shut; the tam is the tan inside tambien and tampoco, and magnus is the magn- of magnify and magnitude el tamaño
explicit focus: pronunciation, etymology; Chapter 358, p. 1525
skilful, clever hábil
explicit focus: etymology; Chapter 728, p. 4131
skirt — a Germanic word for a fold, so a skirt is the folded thing; English fold is the inherited cousin, and falso is a look-alike from a different family la falda
explicit focus: pronunciation, etymology; Chapter 373, p. 1667 slow — Latin lentus, pliant then slow; taken off the page rather than inherited, and the inherited form came out as liento, damp. English relent is the same word lento
explicit focus: pronunciation, etymology; Chapter 371, p. 1651
Small, Fat, Young, Slow, Sweet
chapter topic; Chapter 371, p. 1651
small — no Latin ancestor anybody can name; the dictionary of record calls it an expressive word shared across the Romance languages, and piccolo and petit are the same kind of word pequeño
explicit focus: pronunciation, etymology; Chapter 371, p. 1651
smaller, younger — Latin minor, the partner of minus; Latin built minister out of minus to stand opposite magister, so mayor and menor give you master and minister as a matched pair menor
explicit focus: pronunciation, etymology; Chapter 397, p. 1869 smoke — Latin fumus, a clean example of Latin f- turning into Spanish h-; English has fume, perfume and fumigate from the same word el humo
explicit focus: pronunciation, etymology; Chapter 369, p. 1631 smooth, soft — Latin suavis; English sweet is the inherited cousin of the same root, and to persuade is to make a thing sweet to somebody suave
explicit focus: pronunciation, etymology; Chapter 372, p. 1659 snow — Latin nivem, and the s- that Latin dropped and English kept la nieve
explicit focus: pronunciation, etymology; Chapter 278, p. 923

explicit focus: etymology; Chapter 771, p. 4397

sport el deporte
explicit focus: grammar, etymology; Chapter 412, p. 1963 stairs, ladder — Latin scālāria from scāla, a ladder; scale, ascend, descend and echelon are cousins, while escalate arrived by way of a 1900 trademark la escalera
explicit focus: pronunciation, etymology; Chapter 366, p. 1601 station — Latin statio from stare, to stand; a station is a standing-place, and English station, stationary, statue and stable stand on the same verb la estación
explicit focus: pronunciation, etymology; Chapter 346, p. 1429 Stay in May
chapter topic; Chapter 416, p. 1979
still, yet — literally toda vía, "all the road"; the via in it is English via, viaduct, deviate and obvious todavía
explicit focus: pronunciation, etymology; Chapter 322, p. 1263
stingy, mean tacaño
explicit focus: etymology; Chapter 723, p. 4099
storm — Latin tormenta, from torquere, to twist; torment, torture, torque and contort are the same Latin verb, and a storm is weather that wrings the sky la tormenta
explicit focus: pronunciation, etymology; Chapter 370, p. 1641
Storm, Thunder And Ice
chapter topic; Chapter 370, p. 1641
story, history — Greek historia, knowledge got by inquiry; English history and story are the same word, story having come through Anglo-French la historia
explicit focus: pronunciation, etymology; Chapter 377, p. 1699
straight — Latin rectus; in directions, continue straight, not resto, the rest or remainder recto
explicit focus: pronunciation, etymology; Chapter 401, p. 1901
stress el estrés
explicit focus: etymology; Chapter 710, p. 4017
strong, loud — Latin fortis, the same root already spent on la fuerza; English fort, force, effort, comfort and fortify all come off it fuerte
explicit focus: pronunciation, etymology; Chapter 327, p. 1303
stubborn terco
explicit focus: etymology; Chapter 729, p. 4137

explicit focus: etymology; Chapter 505, p. 2737
successful exitoso
explicit focus: etymology; Chapter 639, p. 3573
such, such a — Latin talis, of that kind; English keeps it in retaliate, to give back the like, and in the lawyers' lex talionis tal
explicit focus: pronunciation, etymology; Chapter 329, p. 1319
Such, Which, Then, But Rather
chapter topic; Chapter 329, p. 1319
sudden repentino
explicit focus: etymology; Chapter 533, p. 2911
suddenly de pronto
explicit focus: etymology; Chapter 534, p. 2917
suddenly — Latin repente, from repens sudden, which is the present participle of repere to creep; the English reptile is the same creeping de repente
explicit focus: pronunciation, etymology; Chapter 356, p. 1509
suffering el sufrimiento
explicit focus: etymology; Chapter 717, p. 4061
sugar — Arabic as-sukkar back through Persian to Sanskrit śarkarā, grit; the a- on the front is the Arabic article, and English sugar came the same road through French el azúcar
explicit focus: pronunciation, etymology; Chapter 367, p. 1611
summit — Latin culmen, which meant the ridge of a roof before it meant a mountaintop; culmen is a squeezed-down columen, with columna a cousin rather than a twin la cumbre
explicit focus: pronunciation, etymology; Chapter 378, p. 1707
sunny soleado
explicit focus: etymology; Chapter 698, p. 3943
supermarket — a calque of English supermarket, American and dated 1933, built on mercado, which Spanish inherited from Latin mercātus, from mercārī, to trade, from merx, wares el supermercado

the thief el ladrón
explicit focus: etymology; Chapter 495, p. 2675
the thing — Latin causa, a cause or legal case, which drifted to mean thing; English cause, because, accuse and excuse keep the original sense la cosa
explicit focus: pronunciation, etymology; Chapter 331, p. 1335
the thirst — Latin sitis; Spanish does not say you are thirsty, it says you have thirst, and the difference is the point la sed
explicit focus: pronunciation, etymology; Chapter 300, p. 1099
the thread — Latin filum with its f worn down to a silent h; filament, filigree and a file of soldiers are all threads el hilo
explicit focus: pronunciation, etymology; Chapter 301, p. 1107
the threat la amenaza
explicit focus: etymology; Chapter 530, p. 2893
the three weather words Spanish reports with hacer — "it makes heat," "it makes cold," "it makes sun" hace calor, hace frío, hace sol
explicit focus: etymology; Chapter 148, p. 511
The Three Words for You
chapter topic; Chapter 5, p. 35
the throat — a word made out of the noise itself, as gargle and gurgle are la garganta
explicit focus: pronunciation, etymology; Chapter 286, p. 987

explicit focus: grammar, etymology; Chapter 470, p. 2501
the uncertainty la incertidumbre
explicit focus: etymology; Chapter 613, p. 3411
the uncle — Greek theios, borrowed into Late Latin; the word English did not take, because English took avunculus instead el tío
explicit focus: pronunciation, etymology; Chapter 307, p. 1147
the underscore — the low hyphen, named by position rather than by shape, and the last piece an address can contain el guion bajo
explicit focus: grammar, etymology; Chapter 428, p. 2079
the unexpected problem; unforeseen el imprevisto
explicit focus: etymology; Chapter 616, p. 3431

the user — usar plus the -ario ending, and the word a service uses for the people it serves el usuario
explicit focus: grammar, etymology; Chapter 472, p. 2523
the vacancy, the open post la vacante
explicit focus: etymology; Chapter 590, p. 3267
the vaccine la vacuna

chapter topic; Chapter 307, p. 1147
the widow la viuda
explicit focus: etymology; Chapter 550, p. 3017

the widower; widowed el viudo
explicit focus: etymology; Chapter 550, p. 3017
the wife — the same spondere pledge, feminine; and the reason handcuffs are called esposas la esposa
explicit focus: pronunciation, etymology; Chapter 307, p. 1147
the witness el testigo
explicit focus: etymology; Chapter 517, p. 2811
the wood — a Germanic word, not a Latin one; bush, bosky and ambush are its English cousins el bosque
explicit focus: pronunciation, etymology; Chapter 291, p. 1027
the word — Latin parabola from Greek parabole, a throwing beside; the same Greek word gave English parable, parabola, parley and parliament la palabra
explicit focus: pronunciation, etymology; Chapter 332, p. 1343
The Words Behind Please and Sorry
chapter topic; Chapter 320, p. 1247
the works, the building site — and the same Latin word as la oficina la obra
explicit focus: grammar, etymology; Chapter 454, p. 2351
the workshop — where a thing goes to be mended, and also the name of a short course el taller
explicit focus: etymology; Chapter 434, p. 2139
the world — Latin mundus, meaning clean and orderly; English mundane is the same word, and Greek kosmos made the identical jump from order to world el mundo
explicit focus: pronunciation, etymology; Chapter 330, p. 1327
the wound, the injury la herida
explicit focus: etymology; Chapter 525, p. 2861
