Preface

This book teaches Persian one word at a time, and it teaches each word by taking it apart. It assumes no Persian and no Perso-Arabic script: every section takes one small expression, introduces only the letters and grammar that expression needs, connects it to words you may already know, and ends by asking for it back. Persian reads right to left — but you will be reading real words long before you have met the whole alphabet.

This is contemporary Iranian Persian. Romanization stays beside the script for now and fades as your reading grows. Where formal written and colloquial forms diverge, both are labelled rather than quietly averaged; Dari and Tajik are relatives of this language, not substitutes for it, and are not smuggled in here.

Persian vocabulary comes in historical layers. Some everyday words are inherited Iranian forms; many others arrived through Arabic and now follow Persian pronunciation and grammar completely. Etymology in this book is practical — it gives a word a handhold in your memory — and never a claim that a borrowed word is less fully Persian today.

This is a starter edition: fourteen short chapters, complete in themselves, with more being written.

How to use this book

Every numbered section is one word, or one small phrase, and takes a few minutes — the length of a queue, an errand, or the walk to the bus. Read them in order the first time through: each section stands on the ones before it, and nothing is used before it has been taught. After that the book becomes reference, and you can open it anywhere.

Say the Persian out loud wherever you can. The prompts under Your turn are written to be spoken, and saying a word is most of what makes it stay. The questions under Before you move on carry their own answers in brackets: cover them, answer from memory, then look.

Chapter 1

Greetings and responses

Modes: voice (1) eyes (3) pen (4) Hands-free start: the first of 8 lessons.

> By the end of this chapter: I can greet someone in Persian, respond courteously, answer yes or no, and copy one alef with a visible model.
> Hold a four-line greeting exchange, say thank-you, yes and no without the page, point to its right-to-left start, and copy one alef beside the visible model.

1.1 Salâm — hello, one greeting at a time

One greeting is enough for this lesson. Listen once: salâm.

You'll want to know: salâm

salâm — hello

Persian runs right to left: a written line starts at the right edge of the page, and your eyes travel towards the left. The joined spelling of salâm waits for the next two-minute lesson, where you will point to its right edge and start there. Today you need only the greeting itself — no letter names, no joining rules, and none of the rest of the alphabet yet.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

salâm means "hello" and literally evokes peace. Persian borrowed it from Arabic, where the consonants s-l-m organize a family concerned with peace, safety, and wholeness. That same old Semitic family also includes Hebrew shalom. The word is now thoroughly everyday Persian.

Why it's said this way

Say salâm to one person or a group. It is neutral, friendly, and safe in most situations.

- See a neighbor: Salâm!
- Answer a greeting: Salâm!

Writing — follow one visible stroke

Keep this model visible: ا. With your finger, trace its one upright stroke from top to bottom. Do not copy it yet and do not hunt for it inside the joined word. The next two-minute lesson will name and copy this one shape.

Your turn

- Point to: the right edge of the page, where Persian reading begins
- Say it: salâm once to greet, and once to answer

Before you move on

Which direction does Persian run? (Right to left.) What old idea lives inside salâm? (Peace, safety, or wholeness.) Say the greeting once.
Persian Online: the writing system

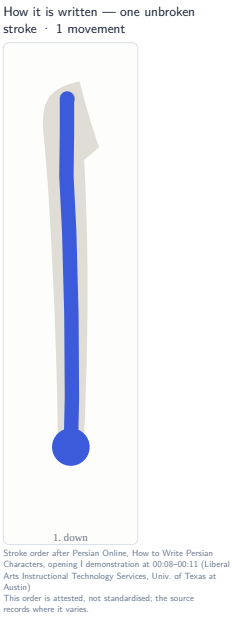

1.2 ا — one stroke with the model present

Here is salâm, joined up and written: سلام. Point to its right edge, where reading begins, and say salâm. Keep this separate one-stroke model visible: ا.

Script — meet alef

The shape is ا, named alef. Draw its one straight stroke from top to bottom, then lift. In salâm, alef carries the long â sound.

Writing — one guided copy

How ا is written, stroke by stroke

Copy ا once beside the model. Look back whenever you need. Say the long â as your pen reaches the bottom, then stop.

Do not hide the model, copy the whole greeting, or add a second letter today. One visible stroke is enough for a first Persian writing lesson.

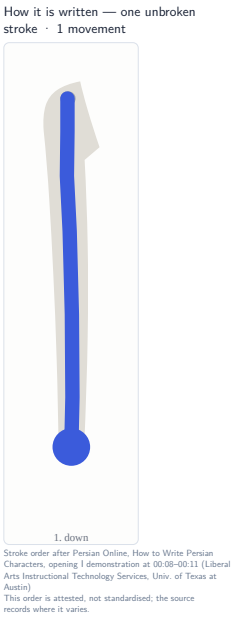

Before you move on

Compare your copy with ا. How many strokes? (One.) Which way did that stroke travel? (Top to bottom.)

1.3 ا — one stroke with the model covered

Look at ا once and say the long â. Then cover it.

Writing — delayed copy

How ا is written, stroke by stroke

With the model covered, wait ten seconds, then draw ا once from memory.

Ten seconds is long enough that your hand cannot be tracing a shape it can still see, and short enough that a stroke you made a minute ago is still there.

Only after the stroke is finished, uncover the model and compare.

Before you move on

One stroke is the easiest shape in the script to get right and the easiest to get backwards, and the page cannot tell you which you did.

So the question to ask yourself is not whether it looks right. It is: which end did your pen start from? Alef travels top to bottom. A stroke drawn upward lands in the same place and behaves differently the moment it has neighbours, which is why a single line is worth this much attention now rather than later.

1.4 ا — the stroke from the sound

Cover every ا on the page. Nothing to trace and nothing to uncover.

Writing — dictation

Say the long â of salâm aloud, or play it, and write the letter that carries it. One stroke, top to bottom, on the right-hand side of the line.

A delayed copy asked your hand to remember a shape. This asks it to turn a sound into a shape, which is the thing writing is actually for, and the two do not always arrive together.

Before you move on

Uncover the model and compare.
Now a warning worth having on the first day rather than the hundredth. What you wrote was alef standing for a vowel, and that is one of its two jobs. At the start of a word the same stroke often carries no long â at all — it is a stand for a short vowel to sit on, because Persian does not begin a word with a bare vowel.
So alef is not a letter with a sound. It is a letter with a position, and what it says depends on where it stands. Nothing in the dictation will tell you that; the word around it will.

1.5 ممنون — thank you

One more expression, and the exchange starts to work: mamnun.

The letters in this word

ممنون — mamnun — thank you

Read it the way you read the greeting: from the right edge, as one whole word with its romanization beside it. One thing about the writing is worth noticing now, because it is true of nearly every Persian word you will meet: the short vowels are not written. The a in mamnun is part of the word you hear, not a mark you read. The letters themselves get their own lessons later; none is being asked of you today.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

mamnun literally describes someone as grateful or obliged, and in ordinary conversation it simply works as "thanks." Persian received it from Arabic, where the consonant family m-n-n gathers ideas of favour and kindness — the same kind of three-consonant family that gave you salâm.

Why it's said this way

Build the smallest exchange there is, and treat each expression as one social move rather than a sentence to analyse:

- A: سلام — salâm — Hello.
- B: سلام — salâm — Hello.
- A: ممنون — mamnun — Thank you.

No grammar is due. Two people, three moves.

Your turn

Say these aloud:

- salâm — mamnun, the two moves in order
- what mamnun literally describes — someone grateful or obliged

Before you move on

Say salâm — mamnun without looking. What does mamnun literally describe? (Someone grateful, or obliged to you.) Which vowels does Persian writing leave out? (The short ones.)

1.6 بله — yes

A greeting and a thank-you need an answer. Here is the polite one.

The letters in this word

بله — bale — yes

Three letters, and both of its vowels are among the short ones Persian leaves out — so the written word carries no vowel at all and the reader supplies a and e. That is the same habit you just met in mamnun, met twice in one short word. Read the romanization and take the shape as a whole; no letter is being asked of you yet.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

bale is usually traced to Arabic balā, "yes, indeed" (Lane).

Why it's said this way

bale is the standard, polite "yes." A more casual âre exists, but one clear affirmative is plenty for now.

- "Is this Persian?" — Bale.
- "Are you ready?" — Bale, mamnun. — Yes, thank you.

Your turn

Say these aloud:

- bale, once on its own
- bale, mamnun — yes, thank you

Before you move on

Answer "yes" in Persian once. (Bale.) Which sounds does the writing leave for you to supply? (The short vowels — here both of them.)

1.7 نه — no

The other answer — and the smallest word in the chapter.

The letters in this word

نه — na — no

Two letters and, once again, an unwritten short a. The second of the two is the shape that also ends bale, so part of this word is already familiar to your eye. Recognising a repeated shape is all that is asked; naming it is a later lesson's job.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

salâm and mamnun both arrived from Arabic. na did not. It continues a very old Indo-Iranian negative, and relatives of it turn up right across the Iranian and Indo-Aryan languages. That is the first bridge from Persian towards Hindi and Urdu — not something to study now, just a reason this tiny word may feel oddly familiar when you meet those languages later.

Why it's said this way

Change only the answer, and keep everything else the same:

- bale — yes
- نه — na — no

Ask yourself a harmless yes/no question and answer it both ways. The two written forms stand side by side at the end of the chapter, where every model is on the page at once.

Your turn

Say these aloud:

- the pair, twice — bale … na
- which of the chapter's four words is not a loan from Arabic — na

Before you move on

Answer "no" in Persian. (Na.) Which of this chapter's words came from somewhere other than Arabic, and where from? (na — an old Indo-Iranian negative.) Now say the whole chain once: hello, thank you, yes, no.

1.8 Chapter 1 — one tiny exchange, one tiny mark

Say سلام once to greet and once to answer.

The exchange

Read it: each Persian line from right to left

- A: سلام — salâm
- B: سلام — salâm
- A: ممنون — mamnun
- B: بله or نه — bale or na

The later three words stay as whole-word supports: you read them as shapes you know, not letter by letter. The next section checks that you can say them without the page.

Your turn — say it back

- Someone holds a door for you. What do you say? (Mamnun.)
- What does mamnun literally describe? (Someone grateful, or obliged — from the Arabic consonant family m-n-n, favour and kindness.)
- "Are you ready?" Answer yes. (Bale.) Now answer no. (Na.)
- na did not come from Arabic. Where is it from? (An old Indo-Iranian negative.)
- Which vowels does Persian writing leave for you to supply? (The short ones.)

Your turn

- Say it: the four-line exchange, choosing bale or na
- Point to: the right edge where each Persian line begins
- Copy: ا once beside the visible model, top to bottom
- Say it: the old idea behind salâm — “peace”

Before you move on

Greet once without help. Check: your ا against the model
No hidden-word spelling and no second letter: the chapter closes with one usable exchange and one supported stroke.

Chapter 2

Give your name

Modes: 🚗 voice (1) 🚗 Hands-free start: its only lesson.

> By the end of this chapter: I can say my name in Persian in one careful sentence, and I can hear the small linking -e that ties the name to its owner.
> One careful sentence with a slot for your own name: esm-e man ... ast, with the spoken ezafe doing the linking.

2.1 اسم من ... است — my name is ...

Greet once, then answer yes and no. The next line gives you one careful sentence for your own name.

The exchange

Read it: the phrase from right to left
Say its words in this order:

اسم من ... است — esm-e man ... ast

- اسم esm = name. You already recognize ا, س, and م.
- The small spoken -e after esm links "name" to its owner. This linker is called ezafe. It is often not written in ordinary text.
- من man = I / me; after the linker it means "my."
- است ast = is.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

esm is an Arabic loan related to Arabic ism, while man and ast belong to Persian's inherited Iranian core. One tiny sentence can therefore show two major layers of Persian vocabulary.

Grammar Lens: one spoken link

Only one grammar idea is new: noun + -e + owner. The spoken -e links "name" to its owner, so esm-e man is literally "name-of me." Do not turn that one pattern into a full grammar table yet.

Your turn

Replace the dots with your name:

esm-e man Sârâ ast. — My name is Sara.

Say these aloud:

- esm-e man Sârâ ast
- replace Sârâ with your own name

In everyday speech, the ending is often shortened. Keep the careful full form for now; it makes every part visible.

Before you move on

What links esm to man? The spoken -e, or ezafe. Say "My name is …" once with your own name.

Chapter 3

Ask and Answer Names

Modes: voice (5) eyes (1) Hands-free start: all 6 lessons.

> By the end of this chapter: I can ask someone's name respectfully with shomâ, answer with my own, and tell them I am pleased to meet them.
> A six-line first meeting: greet, ask the name with respectful shomâ, answer with your own, and acknowledge with khoshvaghtam.

3.1 شما / تو — two relationships inside "you"

Say esm-e man ... ast with your own name. To turn that sentence around, you next need a safe word for the other person.

The two words

Persian	read	use
شما	shomâ	one person respectfully, or more than one person
تو	to	one familiar person

In شما, meet ش sh; its three dots distinguish it from س s. Final ا carries long â. In تو, و has its o value rather than the long u it had in mamnun. Learn the sound from the whole word.

Grammar Lens: begin respectfully

Persian uses plural shomâ for respectful singular address, much as Russian uses vy and French uses vous. Use shomâ with an unfamiliar adult or in a first meeting. Use to after the relationship is familiar. English once made a similar distinction but now uses you for both.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

to is inherited: it is the old Indo-European familiar "you", the word behind English thou and Latin tu, usually traced to Middle Persian tō. shomâ is inherited too, usually traced to Middle Persian ašmā, the old plural "you".

Your turn

Say these aloud:

- a new adult — shomâ
- a close friend — to
- the old family — to, thou, tū, tvam

Before you move on

Which form is safest when the relationship is new? (Shomâ.)
Which is the relative of English thou? (To.)
Source: Persian Online: Pronouns.

3.2 (شما / تو, continued) — The word, taken apart

Before going on: say شما / تو again, and what it means.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

Persian to belongs to the ancient Indo-European familiar-"you" family: English thou, Latin tū, and Sanskrit tvam are relatives. The word is old; the social choice carried by it is current.

Your turn

- Say it: what this lesson added to شما / تو, in one sentence

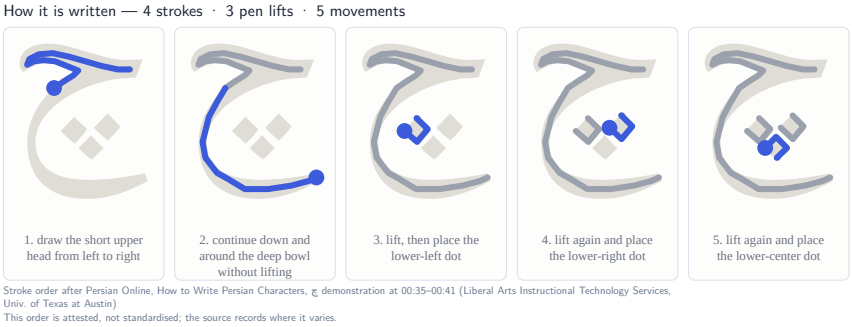

Before you move on

What did this lesson add to شما / تو? Say it once more, without looking.

3.3 چیست — "what is?" in one joined word

Which "you" is safe for a new adult? (shomâ.) Now add the question engine that will follow "your name."

You'll want to know first — چیست

How چ is written, stroke by stroke

چیست — chist — what is?

From the right: چ ch, ی long i, س s, ت t. Read it: the word from the right

چ is one of Persian's four additions to the Arabic alphabet: it uses the same base shape as the letter jim, with three dots below. Meet only this joined form now.

Grammar Lens: two words compressed chist is the careful fusion of chi "what" and ast "is." The opening vowel of ast disappears when the pieces join:

chi + ast → chist

You already know full ast from esm-e man … ast. This lesson changes no copula rule; it gives one high-frequency fused question form.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

chist joins two inherited words. chi, "what", continues Middle Persian čē (EtymDB); ast, "is", goes back to Old Persian astiy and the Indo-European h₁ésti*, the same word as English is (EtymDB).

Your turn

- Say it: chi + ast → chist
- Read it: چیست from چ to ت
- Say it: chist? — "what is?"

Before you move on

What two pieces make chist? (Chi + ast.) Which new Persian letter opens it? (چ, ch, with three dots below.)

3.4 چیست؟ شما اسم — ask a name respectfully

Give the three ready pieces: esm-e "name-of," shomâ respectful "you," and chist "what is?"

The exchange

چیست؟ شما اسم — esm-e shomâ chist? — What is your name?

The Persian order is transparent once the pieces are known:

name + -e + you + what-is?

The spoken ezafe turns esm-e shomâ into "your name." Chist stays at the end. No new agreement or verb table is hiding here.

Script: the question mark

Persian ends a written question with ؟. Its curve faces the opposite way from English ?, matching the right-to-left line. Read the sentence from its right edge; meet the punctuation at the far left.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

esm is borrowed from Arabic ism, "name" (EtymDB; root s-m-w, Lane). shomâ, chist and the linking -e are inherited Persian.

Your turn

- Say it: esm-e shomâ chist?
- Say it: ask, then answer — esm-e man ... ast
- Point to: ؟ at the end of the right-to-left question

Before you move on

Ask the question once without reading the romanization. Then answer with the careful name frame you already know.
Source: Persian Online: Introducing Yourself.

3.5 خوشوقتم — pleased to meet you

Ask esm-e shomâ chist? and answer esm-e man ... ast. One warm response now closes that tiny meeting.

The exchange

خوشوقتم — khoshvaghtam — Pleased to meet you.

Treat the joined word as one social move first. خ gives kh, like the sound in Scottish loch. ش gives sh. Persian commonly pronounces ق here with the merged gh/q sound of contemporary Iranian speech.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

- khosh — pleasant, happy; inherited Persian vocabulary.
- vaqt (pronounced vaght here) — time; an Arabic loan fully at home in Persian.

- -am — I am, the first-person ending.

So the word builds "pleasant-time-I-am" into the idiomatic feeling "I am pleased." The history is layered; the expression is ordinary modern Persian.

Your turn

Say these aloud:

- khoshvaghtam as one smooth response
- the three pieces — khosh + vaqt + -am
- which piece came from Arabic — vaqt

Before you move on

Which response closes the introduction? (Khoshvaghtam.) Which three layers can you hear inside it? (Khosh + vaqt + -am.) Source: Persian Online: Introducing Yourself.

3.6 Practice — a complete Persian name exchange

Recall the four moves without adding anything: greet, ask, answer, acknowledge.

The exchange

A: سلام! — Salâm! B: سلام! — Salâm! A: چیست؟ شما اسم — Esm-e shomâ chist? B: Esm-e man Sârâ ast. A: خوشوقتم. — Khoshvaghtam. B: Mamnun.

Every line is already known. Shomâ keeps the first meeting respectful; the answer returns to man. The question mark sits at the left end of the right-to-left question.

Your turn

Say these aloud:

- both voices, using your own name
- the exchange again without romanization
- only the three name moves — question, answer, response

Before you move on

Run the meeting once from salâm to mamnun. If one line stalls, review that single micro-lesson rather than rereading the whole chapter.

Chapter 4

How Are You?

Modes: voice (5) eyes (1) Hands-free start: all 6 lessons.

> By the end of this chapter: I can ask how someone is in careful respectful Persian and answer that I am well, thank you.
> The careful wellbeing exchange in two moves: hâl-e shomâ chetor ast? answered khubam, mamnun; then hâl, chetor and khub taken apart by meaning and history, and حال، چطور، خوب and خوبم read off the page.

4.1 حال — the "state" in a wellbeing question

> Run only the opening of the meeting you know: salâm and the name question. The next move asks about the other person's present state.

You'll want to know first — one useful word

> حال — hâl — state, condition

From right to left: ح h + ا long â + ل l. Read it: the word from right to left

The first letter is a breathier h than English normally uses; a clear ordinary h is a safe beginner approximation. Keep the whole written word attached to its meaning.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

Persian borrowed hâl from Arabic, then uses it with Persian grammar. You will soon say hâl-e shomâ, literally "the state of you." That -e is the same spoken ezafe already learned in esm-e shomâ.

Your turn

- Say it: hâl — state or condition
- Read it: حال from right to left
- Connect: an Arabic-rooted noun inside Persian ezafe grammar

Before you move on

What does hâl name? (A state or condition.) Which familiar linker will attach an owner to it? (Ezafe -e.)
Source: Persian Online: Greetings List.

4.2 چطور — "how?" one layer at a time

Say the Persian noun for a state or condition. (Hâl.) Now ask about the manner of that state with one question word.

You'll want to know first — the question word

چطور؟ — chetor? — how? / in what manner?

You already met چ ch in chist. Here it is followed by ط t, و o, and ر r. The short e is not written. Learn the sound from the whole word: che-tor.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

Persian Online takes چطور apart as Persian che, "what," plus طور tor, "manner," borrowed from Arabic ṭawr, "time, state, manner" (Lane). The literal picture is "in what manner?" That layered history is useful memory, but chetor is one everyday Persian question word now.

Your turn

- Say it: chetor? — how?
- Point to: familiar چ at the right edge
- Rebuild: che "what" + tor "manner"

Before you move on

Which part means "what"? (Che.) Which borrowed part means "manner"? (Tor.)
Source: Persian Online: Interrogatives.

4.3 حال شما چطور است؟ — ask "How are you?" respectfully

Recall hâl "state," shomâ respectful "you," chetor "how," and careful ast "is." The only assembly move is familiar ezafe.

The exchange

حال شما چطور است؟ — hâl-e shomâ chetor ast? — How are you?

Build it without translating English word for word:

state + -e + respectful-you + how + is?

The unwritten ezafe in hâl-e shomâ works exactly like esm-e shomâ. Persian asks, literally, "the state of you, in what manner is?"

Grammar Lens: one reliable careful form

This chapter asks you to produce the careful written form with ast. Everyday Iranian speech often contracts the end to chetore?; recognize that preview, but keep the uncontracted line until the careful pattern is secure.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

Two layers meet in this line. hâl, "state", is borrowed from Arabic ḥāl (root ḥ-w-l, Lane), and chetor is Persian che, "what", with Arabic ṭawr, "manner". shomâ, ast and the linking -e are inherited Persian.

Your turn

- Say it: hâl-e shomâ chetor ast?
- Trace it: hâl-e shomâ — state-of-you
- Choose: careful production now — final ast

Before you move on

Ask once from memory. What already-known grammar holds hâl and shomâ together? (Ezafe -e.)
Source: Persian Online: Greetings List.

4.4 خوب — "good" and "well"

Ask hâl-e shomâ chetor ast? The smallest positive answer begins with one word.

You'll want to know first — the answer word

خوب — khub — good, well

At the right edge, خ is kh, made farther back than English h. و carries long u, as it did in mamnun; final ب closes the word with b. Say it as one beat: khub.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

Persian's everyday vocabulary is layered. Hâl and the tor inside chetor came through Arabic; khub belongs to the inherited Persian layer. All three are fully ordinary Persian now. History helps memory without ranking one layer as more authentic than another.

Your turn

- Say it: khub — good, well
- Read it: خ + long-u و + final ب
- Contrast: inherited khub beside borrowed hâl

Before you move on

Give the answer word once without romanization. Which letter carries its long u? (و.)
Source: Persian Online: Greetings List.

4.5 ممنون خوبم، — "I am well, thank you"

Say khub "well," then the thanks you learned in Chapter 1: mamnun. One small ending turns the first word into a full answer.

The exchange

ممنون خوبم، — Khubam, mamnun. — I am well, thank you.

The new final م is m. Attach it directly to خوب: خوب + م → خوبم. Persian script and speech both keep the answer compact.

Grammar Lens: one copula ending, not a table

The attached ending -am means "I am" here. Persian Online notes that خوبم by itself already means "I am fine"; the separate pronoun man is unnecessary. Learn only this useful first-person ending today. The rest of the copula set can arrive one form at a time later.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

khubam is khub, "good, well", which continues Middle Persian xūb (EtymDB), with the inherited ending -am, "I am". mamnun is borrowed from Arabic mamnūn, "favoured, obliged" (root m-n-n, Lane).

Your turn

- Build: khub + -am → khubam
- Say it: khubam, mamnun
- Point to: final م carrying "I am"

Before you move on

What does final -am contribute? ("I am.") Do you need a separate man in this answer? (No.)
Sources: Persian Online: Verb "To Be" and Greetings List.

4.6 Practice — a Persian wellbeing exchange

Recall the two moves only: ask about the other person's state, then answer "I am well, thank you."

The exchange

A: سلام! حال شما چطور است؟ Salâm! Hâl-e shomâ chetor ast? B: خوبم، ممنون. Khubam, mamnun.

Every piece is already owned. The question reuses respectful shomâ, ezafe, and careful ast. The answer's final -am carries "I am," so no new pronoun is hiding between the lines.

Grammar Lens: keep the social choice visible

Use this careful question in a first meeting. You may hear shorter conversational forms, but producing one stable respectful line first prevents script, register, and contraction from arriving as one oversized step.

Your turn — the words inside the exchange

Take the two lines apart without the page.

- What does hâl name? (A state or condition.) Where is it from? (Arabic, now used inside Persian ezafe grammar.)

- Which word asks "how?" (Chetor.) Its two parts? (Persian che, "what," plus the Arabic loan tor, "manner": "in what manner?")
- What does khub mean? (Good, well.) Which layer is it from? (The inherited Persian layer, beside borrowed hâl and tor.)

Script — the four words on the page

حال · چطور · خوب · خوبم

- Read it: each word from the right edge — hâl, chetor, khub, khubam
- Point to: the چ opening چطور, the long-u و in خوب, and the final م that makes خوبم

(ح h, ا long â, ل l spell حال; in چطور the short e is not written.)

Your turn

- Say it: both voices with the script visible
- Say it: both voices without romanization
- Switch: ask first, then answer after a pause

Before you move on

Run the exchange once from salâm to mamnun. If one side stalls, return to that single micro-lesson rather than rereading the chapter.

Chapter 5

Take Leave

Modes: voice (4) eyes (1) Hands-free start: all 5 lessons.

> By the end of this chapter: I can open a short Persian conversation, check how the other person is, and close it with khodâ hâfez.
> A four-line interaction with a beginning and an end: salâm, the wellbeing check, then khodâ hâfez from both voices; then the farewell taken apart into khodâ and hâfez, and خدا، حافظ and خداحافظ read off the page.

5.1 خدا — the Persian half of a farewell

> Run the known wellbeing exchange once. The next chapter adds only the final social move: ending that interaction.

You'll want to know first — one word

> خدا — khodâ — God

From right to left: خ kh + د d + ا long â. Read it: the word from right to left

The short o is learned with the word rather than written as a separate letter. Keep the back-of-the-mouth kh gentle; clarity matters more than force.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

Modern khodâ continues Middle Persian xwadây, "lord." The everyday farewell will pair this inherited Persian word with an Arabic loan. That mixed history is normal Persian vocabulary, not an exception to memorize away.

Your turn

- Say it: khodâ — God
- Read it: خدا from the right edge
- Connect: modern khodâ ← Middle Persian xwadây "lord"

Before you move on

Which letter carries the final long â? (ا.) Which vowel is heard but not written separately? (The short o.)
Source: Wiktionary: خدا.

5.2 حافظ — "guardian" or "protector"

Say it: khodâ, "God," the word from the last lesson

Keep it separate: this lesson adds only the second word behind the farewell.

You'll want to know first — one word

حافظ — hâfez — guardian, protector

Read it: ح ا ف ظ from right to left

ا carries long â. In contemporary Persian, final ظ is pronounced z here, so say hâ-fez, not an English th sound. The short e is part of the learned word and is normally unwritten.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

Arabic ḥāfiẓ is an active participle from the root ḥ-f-ẓ, "guard, preserve." Persian borrowed the word and uses its Persian pronunciation hâfez. Keep the useful meaning first; the root is a memory hook.

Your turn

- Say it: hâfez — guardian, protector
- Read it: حافظ
- Connect: Arabic ḥ-f-ẓ — guard, preserve

Before you move on

What does hâfez contribute to the farewell? (The idea of guarding or protecting.)
Source: American Heritage Dictionary: hafiz.

5.3 خداحافظ — goodbye

Retrieve khodâ and hâfez separately: "God" + "guardian." Now let them become one everyday social move.

The two words — put the known pieces together

خداحافظ — khodâ hâfez — goodbye

Persian normally writes the two spoken pieces together. Start with خدا, add حافظ. Read it: the joined spelling خداحافظ from the right edge

Keep the two meaning layers available underneath the complete form.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

khodâ hâfez is "God, the guardian". khodâ is inherited, from Middle Persian xwadāy, "lord"; hâfez is borrowed from Arabic ḥāfiẓ, "guardian, keeper" (EtymDB; root ḥ-f-ẓ, Lane).

Your turn

- Build: khodâ + hâfez
- Read it: joined خداحافظ
- Use: say it only when the interaction ends

Before you move on

When do you use khodâ hâfez? (At parting, not at the opening.)
Source: Persian Online: Greetings List.

5.4 (خداحافظ, continued) — Grammar Lens — a complete wish without a full sentence

Before going on: say خداحافظ again, and what it means.

Grammar Lens — a complete wish without a full sentence

The expression carries the protective sense "God [be] guardian," but everyday speakers use the whole formula simply as goodbye. No new verb is required for beginner production. It is a broadly polite, reliable way to end the short respectful interaction built in Chapters 1–4.

Your turn

- Say it: what this lesson added to خداحافظ, in one sentence

Before you move on

What did this lesson add to خداحافظ? Say it once more, without looking.

5.5 Practice — open, check, and close

Without looking ahead, retrieve the expression for the beginning and the expression for the end. Do not add a new middle line.

The exchange — the complete interaction

A: سلام! Hâl-e shomâ chetor ast? Salâm! Hâl-e shomâ chetor ast? B: Khubam, mamnun. A: خداحافظ. Khodâ hâfez. B: خداحافظ. Khodâ hâfez.

Every line is already learned. Salâm opens; khodâ hâfez closes. The same farewell works for both voices, so no pronoun, agreement ending, or new register table is hiding inside the practice.

Your turn — the two halves of goodbye

Take the farewell apart without the page.

- What does khodâ mean? (God.) Where is it from? (Inherited Persian: Middle Persian xwadây, "lord.")
- What does hâfez mean? (Guardian, protector.) Where is it from? (Arabic ḥāfiẓ, from the root ḥ-f-ẓ, "guard, preserve.")
- The pieces picture "God [be] guardian." Is a verb needed to say goodbye? (No: the whole formula means goodbye.)

Script — the halves, then the whole

خدا · حافظ · خداحافظ

- Read it: خدا, then حافظ, then the joined خداحافظ, each from the right edge

(خ kh, د d, ا long â spell خدا; the final ظ of حافظ is said z.)

Your turn

- Choose: meeting begins → salâm
- Choose: interaction ends → khodâ hâfez
- Run through: both voices once with script, once without romanization

Before you move on

Run the full exchange once. If the final line stalls, return only to the assembled-farewell lesson rather than rereading the chapter.

Chapter 6

Name a Verb, Find Its Stem

Modes: 🚗 voice (5) 🚗 Hands-free start: all 5 lessons.

> By the end of this chapter: I can name five core Persian verbs in their dictionary form, recognise the -tan/-dan ending that marks any Persian infinitive, and give the present stem that each verb carries beside it.
> The five pairs run back to back from memory — budan, raftan/rav-, âmadan/â-, goftan/gu-, dânestan/dân- — with the infinitive ending named and the stem produced for each.

6.1 بودن — "to be," and the ending every Persian verb wears

> Chapter 4 ended on khubam, "I am well." That -am carried "I am" with no verb beside it. This chapter names the verb it belongs to.

You'll want to know first — one verb

> بودن — budan — to be

Four letters, all of them already yours. From the right edge: ب b, و long u, د d, ن n. Persian و never joins to the letter on its left, so the word falls into two clumps, بو and دن — the same kind of break ا makes inside سلام.

Grammar Lens: how a Persian verb announces itself

English names a verb with a word in front of it: to be, to go, to know. Persian names it with an ending on the back. Every Persian infinitive — every one, with no list of exceptions — finishes in -tan or -دن -dan. بودن is bu + dan. Whenever a Persian word ends in -tan or -dan, you are holding a verb in its naming form.
Persian rewards you here: one set of personal endings serves every verb. What it asks instead is one extra fact per verb — the next lesson is about that fact.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

budan continues Middle Persian būdan, from the Indo-European root bheu-*, "to grow, to become, to be." English be and been are that root, worn smooth. So are German bin, Latin fuī "I was" — the ancestor of English future — and Sanskrit bhavati.
The resemblance runs through Persian's plainest words: mâdar is mother, pedar is father, barâdar is brother, dokhtar is daughter, نام nâm is name. Nobody borrowed these; both languages inherited them.
One caution to carry through the chapter: lookalikes lie. Persian بد bad does mean "bad," but its history and the English word's are unconnected. A cousin has to be traced, not guessed.

Your turn

- Say it: budan — to be
- Read it: بودن from the right edge, in its two clumps
- Name: the ending that marks a Persian infinitive — -tan / -dan
- Connect: budan ← bheu-* → English be, been
- Retrieve: the ending on khubam that already meant "I am"

Before you move on

How does a Persian verb announce that it is a verb? (It ends in -tan or -dan.) Which English word is budan? (Be — the same inherited root.) Is Persian bad a cousin of English bad? (No; that one is coincidence.)
Source: Wiktionary: بودن.

6.2 رفتن — "to go," and the second form that travels with it

Retrieve the Persian for "to be," and the ending that marked it as a verb. That ending returns here, on a word that brings the extra fact Persian asks of you.

You'll want to know first — one verb

رفتن — raftan — to go

From the right edge: ر r, ف f, ت t, ن n — all four familiar, ر from chetor and ف from hâfez. ر does not join leftward, so it stands alone and فتن follows as one run. The ending is the -tan you met on budan.

Grammar Lens: the second fact every Persian verb carries

Persian keeps two forms for each verb, and you learn them as a pair. The first is the infinitive, رفتن raftan. Strip its -an and you have رفت raft, the past stem; everything about yesterday is built on that.
The second is the present stem, and it cannot be predicted from the infinitive. For raftan it is rav. Everything about now is built on rav-: mi-ravam "I go," mi-ravad "she goes."
So the fact to store is not raftan alone but raftan → rav-, said in one breath. Get the pair and the whole verb opens: the endings that follow a stem are the same for every Persian verb.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

رفتن raftan is inherited: it is usually traced to Middle Persian raftan. Its deeper Indo-European ancestry is not settled, so no English cousin is claimed for it here.
The split itself needs no excuse — English does the same thing. Go and went are two unrelated words sharing one verb; so are be and was. English calls that irregularity and buries it in a list. Persian makes it the ordinary shape of a verb and says so up front.
rav is short: ر, then the letter vâv, with no join between them. Say the pair aloud until it sounds like one item — raftan, rav.

Your turn

- Say it: raftan — to go

- Say it: the pair as one item — raftan, rav
- Read it: رفتن, and say its stem rav
- Name: the ending that made raftan an infinitive
- Retrieve: the Chapter 6 verb meaning "to be" — budan

Before you move on

Which two facts does a Persian verb ask you to store? (The infinitive and its present stem.) What is the pair for "to go"? (Raftan, rav.) Could rav- have been worked out from raftan? (No — which is why it is learned with the word.)
Source: Wiktionary: رفتن.

6.3 آمدن — "to come," and an alef that wears a hat

Say the pair for "to go" as one item. Now expect the same two-part shape from every verb that follows, including this one, which travels in the opposite direction.

You'll want to know first — one verb and one new shape

آمدن — âmadan — to come

The last three letters are old friends: م m, د d, ن n, and the -dan ending tells you at once that this is an infinitive. The first shape is new. آ is plain ا with a small wavy stroke over it, called madde, and it is what Persian writes when a word opens on long â. Plain ا at the start of a word carries a short vowel — that is the ا in اسم esm. The hat is the difference between esm and âmadan.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

âmadan was built from a prefix â-, "toward," and the very old verb root gwem-, "to go, to come." In Old Iranian that gave a form like â-gmata-, "come toward"; the g wore away, the m survived, and Middle Persian âmad is what was left.
That root is one of the family's great travellers. English kept it almost bare as come. Latin turned it into venīre, which English then borrowed back dozens of times over: advent, adventure, convene, convenient, event, invent, avenue, revenue, prevent, souvenir. Sanskrit has gacchati, "goes." So âmadan and come are not lookalikes; they are the same word, four thousand years apart.

The present stem is آ â — a single letter — heard as ây- before an ending: mi-âyam "I come." Store the pair as âmadan, â-. It comes from a different ancient root than the infinitive does, which is exactly why the two look nothing alike.

Your turn

- Say it: âmadan — to come
- Say it: the pair as one item — âmadan, â-
- Read it: آمدن, starting at the hatted alef
- Connect: âmadan ← gwem-* → English come, advent, event
- Contrast: raftan, rav- going out; âmadan, â- coming in

Before you move on

What does the little hat on آ tell you? (The word opens on long â.) Which everyday English verb shares âmadan's root? (Come.) And what is the pair for "to come"? (Âmadan, â-.)
Source: Wiktionary: آمدن.

6.4 گفتن — "to say," written with a letter Arabic does not have

Say the pair for "to come." Then hold the shape in mind: a name, and a present stem that has to be learned beside it. Here is a third verb built the same way.

You'll want to know first — one verb and one new letter

گفتن — goftan — to say, to tell

Read it: the word from the right

The last three, ف f, ت t, ن n, close the word with the familiar -tan. The opening shape is گ g, called gâf: a long slanting stroke with a second slanting stroke laid above it.

Arabic has no g, so Persian made one. Persian adds four letters to the inherited Arabic set, for p, ch, zh, and g (گ), and you have already met one of them, the ch of chist. Each is an Arabic letter with extra strokes: گ is the k shape wearing a second bar.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

The present stem is gu: گ then the letter vâv, no join between them. Mi-guyam is "I say." Store the pair as goftan, gu-.

Now the part that makes the pair unforgettable. Persian has an ordinary, everyday word for "conversation": goftogu. Pull it apart and it is the past stem گفت goft, a linking -o- meaning "and," and the present stem gu. A conversation is literally said-and-say. The two halves of the verb, sitting next to each other in a noun you can hear on any Iranian news broadcast.

The verb is old. Old Persian, the language of Darius's cliff inscriptions, already had the root gaub-, "to say, to call oneself." Outside the Iranian branch its relatives are not securely established, so no English cousin is claimed here — and English gab and gossip, which look tempting, come from somewhere else entirely.

Your turn

- Say it: goftan — to say
- Say it: the pair as one item — goftan, gu-
- Read it: گ, then گفتن, and say the stem gu
- Build: goft + -o- + gu → goftogu, conversation
- Retrieve: the pair for "to come" — âmadan, â-

Before you move on

Which letter opens گفتن, and why is it not in Arabic? (گ gâf; Arabic has no g sound.) What two pieces of the verb hide inside goftogu? (The past stem goft and the present stem gu.) Say the pair. (Goftan, gu-.)

Source: Wiktionary: گفتن.

6.5 دانستن — "to know," and five pairs held together

Name the ending that marks a Persian infinitive. The last verb of the chapter wears it, and every letter in the word is one you can already read.

You'll want to know first — one verb and its stem

دانستن — dânestan — to know

From the right: د d, ا long â, ن n, س s, ت t, ن n. Nothing new to decode, which is a good place to be six lessons into a script.

The present stem is دان dân: mi-dânam, "I know." The pair is dânestan, dân- — and this stem is one you can watch working. dânesh is "knowledge"; add gâh, "place," and you get dâneshgâh, university — a knowledge-place, built straight off the stem.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

dânestan belongs to the Indo-European root gnō-*, "to know." English inherited it three times over: know, and also can (originally "to know how"), ken, cunning, and uncouth, which is literally "un-known." Latin's nōscere sent English notice, notion, note, recognise, cognition, and noble — a noble person being a known one. Greek gnōsis gives diagnosis, prognosis, agnostic. Sanskrit has jânâti, "knows."

One honest footnote: specialists still argue about how this root arrived in Persian wearing a d, when its Iranian relatives usually show a z or zh. The membership in the family is standard; the road it took is disputed, and this book flags that rather than smoothing it over.

Persian's other "know" is shenâkhtan, used for knowing a person rather than a fact. Its stem shenâs- shows the same root more plainly — it is the gnos- of gnosis, wearing Iranian clothes.

And budan has a present stem too: bâsh-. It waits for the chapter where the present tense arrives.

Your turn

- Say it: dânestan, dân- — to know
- Say it: raftan, rav- — to go
- Say it: âmadan, â- — to come
- Say it: goftan, gu- — to say
- Say it: budan — to be
- Build: dân → dânesh → dâneshgâh, university
- Connect: dânestan ← gnō-* → English know, can, diagnosis

Before you move on

Which two things does a Persian verb ask you to store? (Its name in -tan or -dan, and its present stem.) Which English words share dânestan's root? (Know, can, and the gnosis family.) Now run all five pairs once, out loud, without the page.

Chapter 7

Four Verbs of the Mind

Modes: 🚗 voice (4) 🚗 Hands-free start: all 4 lessons.

> By the end of this chapter: I can say think, understand, read and write in Persian, give the present stem of each, and tell which of the three ways a Persian verb is built each one uses.
> The chapter closes on neveshtan, nevis-, then runs its four verbs back to back — fekr kardan with kon-, fahmidan with fahm-, khândan with khân-, neveshtan with nevis- — and names which is a compound, which hands its stem over free, and which two had to be told. The five pairs from Chapter 6 run after them, so all nine are produced from memory in one sitting.

7.1 فکر کردن — "to think," written as two words

> Name the two facts every Persian verb has asked you to store. This one brings a third shape: it is spelled as two words, and only the second is the verb.

You'll want to know first — one verb in two pieces

فکر کردن — fekr kardan — to think

The first word, فکر fekr, is a noun: "thought." From the right — ف f, ک k, ر r.

The second, کردن kardan, is the verb, and it means to do, to make. Its ending is the -dan you have collected since budan. Word for word, the phrase is thought to-do.

Grammar Lens: Persian asks less of you than you fear

Persian has no grammatical gender, so nothing has to agree. It has no noun cases: a noun keeps one shape everywhere. Its adjectives never change. And it has exactly one set of personal endings — -am, -i, -ad, -im, -id, -and — taken by every verb in the language.
What it asks instead is the present stem, and this: many of its commonest verbs are two words. A noun sits in front, and a plain verb behind it does the grammatical work. کردن kardan is the workhorse — put almost any noun in front of it and you have a verb. You met the same instinct in khoshvaghtam, which welded khosh, "good," to vaqt, "time."

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

The halves come from opposite ends of Persian's history.
فکر fekr is a loan from Arabic fikr, "thought," on the root f-k-r, and it takes Persian grammar completely.
کردن kardan is as Persian as a word gets: Old Persian kar-, "to do," from the Indo-European root k^{w}er-, "to make." That root gave Sanskrit karoti, "he does," and karman, "deed" — which English borrowed outright as karma. English has no inherited cousin here, so that is a borrowing, not a family resemblance, and this book says which is which.
The present stem is کن kon: mi-konam, "I do." Store kardan, kon-, and note the opening ک kâf — the shape gâf is built from, as goftan wears it with a second bar.

Your turn

- Say it: fekr kardan — to think
- Split: fekr, thought — kardan, to do
- Say it: the pair as one item — kardan, kon-
- Read it: ک in کردن, then gâf in goftan — one bar apart
- Retrieve: the two words welded inside khoshvaghtam
- Name: the ending that marks kardan as an infinitive

Before you move on

Which half of fekr kardan is the verb, and what is its present stem? (Kardan; kon-.) Name two of the four things Persian does without. (Gender, cases, adjective agreement, a second set of endings.)
Source: Wiktionary: کردن.

7.2 فهمیدن — "to understand," and the class that gives its stem away

Say the two words meaning "to think," and which of them is the verb. Then say the pair for "to know." This lesson adds the verb that sits between them.

You'll want to know first — one verb, one word this time

فهمیدن — fahmidan — to understand

One word, not two. From the right: ف f, ه h, م m, ی long i, د d, ن n. The ی is the letter you first read inside chist.

Persian keeps dânestan and فهمیدن fahmidan apart the way English keeps know and understand apart. Dânestan stores a fact; fahmidan grasps a point.

Grammar Lens: the one stem you never have to be told

Every verb so far handed you an unpredictable stem: raftan gave rav-, goftan gave gu-. Here is the relief.
When a Persian infinitive ends in -یدن -idan, its present stem is what is left once you take the -idan off. Nothing shifts. فهمیدن fahmidan minus -idan leaves فهم fahm: mi-fahmam, "I understand." The pair is fahmidan, fahm-, and you could have worked it out yourself.
This is no small exception. -idan is the suffix Persian reaches for whenever it needs a new verb, so the predictable class is large and growing. The verbs that fight you are the old inherited ones.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

فهم fahm is Arabic, "understanding," from the root f-h-m. Persian took the noun and did something Arabic would not: it glued a native Persian suffix onto it and made a verb.
You have now watched Arabic words arrive three ways. vaqt, inside khoshvaghtam, came as a noun and stayed one. hâl came as a noun and took Persian's own linking grammar. hâfez came as a participle and became a name. And فهم fahm was turned into a Persian verb outright. Against all of them stands khub, inherited Persian from the start, borrowed from nobody. Persian vocabulary is layered, and neither layer is less Persian than the other today.

Your turn

- Say it: fahmidan — to understand
- Derive: strip -idan from fahmidan → the stem fahm-
- Contrast: dânestan stores a fact; fahmidan grasps a point
- Retrieve: the pair for "to know" — dânestan, dân-
- Name: three Arabic arrivals — vaqt, hâl, hâfez — and one inherited word, khub
- Read it: the ی inside فهمیدن, the letter you first met in chist

Before you move on

How do you get the present stem of any -idan verb? (Take the -idan off.) Which of Persian's layers did fahm arrive from, and which layer does khub belong to? (Fahm is Arabic; khub is inherited Persian.)
Source: Wiktionary: فهمیدن.

7.3 خواندن — "to read," and a letter that is written but not said

Say the pair for "to understand," and how you got its stem without being told. This verb is not so obliging — and its spelling hides something.

You'll want to know first — one verb with a silent letter

خواندن — khândan — to read

From the right: خ kh, و, ا long â, ن n, د d, ن n. Six letters — but only five sounds. The و in second position is written and not pronounced. The word is khândan, never khwândan.

That خ opens khub, "good," where the و works as a vowel. Here it does nothing.

The silent و belongs to a small, closed set of words — always after خ, before ا. Not a rule to apply, just words you recognize.

Grammar Lens: one verb, four English verbs

The present stem is خوان khân — same silent و, so khân-. Mi-khânam, "I read." The pair is khândan, khân-.

Now the surprise. خواندن also means to recite, to sing and to study. English splits those jobs across separate words; Persian does not, and the reason is in the word's history.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

khândan is from Proto-Iranian hwanH-, "to call," from the Indo-European root swenh₂-, "to sound." The four meanings become one idea: reading, reciting and singing all make a text sound. For most of history, reading was reading aloud.

Latin took the root as sonus, which English borrowed over and over: sound, sonic, resonate, consonant, sonata. Sanskrit has svanati, "it sounds." And English inherited one word directly, without Latin's help — swan, most likely "the sounding one."

The silent و is a fossil of this: the Iranian root began hw-, and Persian spelled the cluster long after it stopped saying it. خدا khodâ comes from the same xw- family, continuing Middle Persian xwadây — gone from both mouths, surviving in one spelling.

One contrast to fix: the long â here is plain ا because it sits inside the word. When a word opens on long â, Persian puts a hat on the alef, as âmadan does.

Your turn

- Say it: khândan — to read

- Say it: the pair as one item — khândan, khân-
- Read it: خواندن, sounding the خ and skipping the و
- List: the four jobs of one verb — read, recite, sing, study
- Connect: khândan ← swenh₂-* → English sound, swan
- Contrast: ا inside a word, the hatted alef when a word opens on long â

Before you move on

How many letters does خواندن have, and how many sounds? (Six and five.) Which four English verbs does it cover, and why those four together? (Read, recite, sing, study — its root means to sound.) Source: Wiktionary: خواندن.

7.4 نوشتن — "to write," and four verbs of the mind held together

Say the pair for "to read," and name the letter in it that is written but never said. Its natural partner closes this chapter.

You'll want to know first — one verb and its stem

نوشتن — neveshtan — to write

From the right: ن n, و v, ش sh, ت t, ن n. Here the و is pronounced — a plain consonant v — the exact contrast the last lesson set up.

The present stem is nevis: mi-nevisam, "I write." The pair is neveshtan, nevis-, as unpredictable as raftan, rav- was. Name the price plainly: the stem of an inherited verb cannot be worked out, so it is learned in the same breath as the infinitive.

Watch the stem earn its keep: nevis- plus -ande gives nevisande, "writer." The stem, not the infinitive, is what Persian builds on.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

neveshtan is an Old Persian compound: ni-, "down," plus the root paiš-*, "to adorn, to mark, to paint." To write was to paint something down — a verb Darius had carved into a cliff at Behistun.

The root is Indo-European peyǩ-*, "to cut, to mark, to paint." Latin made it pingere, and English has borrowed from that ever since: paint, picture, pigment, depict. So neveshtan and picture are one root, one branch writing, the other painting.
Trace the p if you like a puzzle: it softened to b in Middle Persian nibištan, then to the v in nevis-.

Grammar Lens: what this chapter has actually given you

Four verbs, three ways a Persian verb can be built.
fekr kardan is a compound: noun plus kardan. fahmidan is a -idan verb, stem free. khândan and نوشتن neveshtan are inherited verbs, stems you must be told.
Three shapes, one set of personal endings for all of them — the whole verb system in outline.

Your turn

Run the chapter's four, then the five that came before, without the page.

- Say it: fekr kardan — to think; kardan, kon-
- Say it: fahmidan, fahm- — to understand
- Say it: khândan, khân- — to read
- Say it: neveshtan, nevis- — to write
- Say it: budan — to be; raftan, rav-; âmadan, â-; goftan, gu-; dânestan, dân-
- Build: nevis + -ande → nevisande, writer
- Connect: neveshtan ← peyǩ-* → English paint, picture
- Name: the English cousins of budan and dânestan — be and know

Before you move on

Which of this chapter's four verbs is a compound, and which one hands you its stem for free? (Fekr kardan; fahmidan.) What did neveshtan originally mean? (To paint down.) Now say all nine pairs you hold, in any order.

Chapter 8

Taking, Asking, Helping, Loving

Modes: 🚗 voice (4) 🚗 Hands-free start: all 4 lessons.

> By the end of this chapter: I can say take, ask, help and love in Persian, give the present stem where a verb has one, and sort all thirteen verbs I hold into compounds, -idan verbs and inherited verbs.
> The chapter closes on dust dâshtan — to have as friend — and its dâr- stem, then runs all thirteen verbs the track has taught: this chapter's four, Chapter 7's four, and Chapter 6's five, each with its stem, sorted into the three shapes a Persian verb can take.

8.1 گرفتن — "to take," and a cousin you can hear

> Say the pair for "to write." Then get ready for a Persian verb whose English relative you will recognize the moment you hear it.

You'll want to know first — one verb and its stem

گرفتن — gereftan — to take

From the right: گ g, ر r, ف f, ت t, ن n. The opening shape is گ gâf, the letter Persian added because Arabic has no g — the same one that opens گفتن goftan. Neither گ nor ر joins leftward, so the word arrives in three small pieces and closes on the familiar -tan.

The present stem is gir: mi-giram, "I take." The pair is gereftan, gir- — inherited, and so unpredictable, exactly as promised.

Persian uses it widely: to take, to get, to catch, to hold, to seize. It is a hand closing around something.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

gereftan continues Middle Persian griftan, from Old Persian grab-, "to seize," from the Indo-European root $*g^{h}rebh_{2}$-, "to grab, to seize."
Say gir- and grip one after the other. Say gereftan and grab. That is not a coincidence and it is not a loan in either direction — English and Persian both inherited the word from a common ancestor, and four thousand years later the consonants g-r-b are still sitting in both.
English kept grab, grip, grasp, grope and gripe; German kept greifen; Sanskrit has gṛhṇāti, "he seizes"; Russian has grabit', "to rob."
Collect the evidence you already hold. budan is English be. to is English thou — the old familiar you, which English has nearly retired and Persian uses daily. Persian is not a distant relative of English in an unfamiliar script; it is a cousin.
Persian has repaid the family too. English bazaar, caravan, khaki, pyjama, lemon, spinach and paradise all came from Persian — the last of them from Old Persian paridaida, "a walled garden."

Your turn

- Say it: gereftan — to take
- Say it: the pair as one item — gereftan, gir-
- Read it: گ opening گرفتن, then گ opening گفتن
- Connect: gir- → English grip; gereftan → English grab
- Retrieve: two cousins you already hold — budan is be, to is thou
- Name: three English words Persian gave away — bazaar, khaki, paradise

Before you move on

Which English verbs are gereftan's own relatives? (Grab, grip, grasp.) Did English borrow it from Persian? (No — both inherited it.) Say the pair once more. (Gereftan, gir-.)
Source: Wiktionary: گرفتن.

8.2 پرسیدن — "to ask," and the questions you could already ask

Say the pair for "to take." Then put the respectful name question you have had since Chapter 3. You have been asking without owning the verb.

You'll want to know first — one verb that behaves

پرسیدن — porsidan — to ask

From the right: پ p, ر r, س s, ی long i, د d, ن n. The opening پ pe is another letter Persian added — a b shape with three dots beneath instead of one.

Now the ending: -یدن -idan. Strip it, and the present stem remains: پرس pors. Mi-porsam, "I ask." The pair is porsidan, pors- — the same free ride fahmidan gave you.

Grammar Lens: asking a question and asking a person

Two chapters ago you learned to put a question — esm-e shomâ chist?, hâl-e shomâ chetor ast? Both work by word order and a question word, with no verb meaning "ask" in them.

That is the ordinary case, as in English: you do not say "I ask you what your name is," you just ask it. پرسیدن is for talking about the asking.

The noun from the same stem is porsesh, "a question": stem plus -esh, the machine that turned دان dân- into dânesh, "knowledge."

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

porsidan continues Middle Persian pursīdan, from Old Persian pars- — a word Darius used on stone — and beyond that the Indo-European root preḱ-*, "to ask." Sanskrit has pṛcchati; German still says fragen. English is the interesting case. It had this root and lost it: Old English friġnan, "to ask," died out. Then English borrowed the root back from Latin, which had turned it into precārī, "to pray." So English says pray, prayer, precarious — "held by prayer," and so uncertain — and deprecate. A root the language once owned now survives only as loans.

Your turn

- Say it: porsidan — to ask
- Derive: strip -idan → the stem pors-
- Pair: porsidan, pors- beside fahmidan, fahm- — both free
- Contrast: gereftan, gir- had to be told; these two did not
- Build: pors + -esh → porsesh, a question
- Connect: porsidan ← preḱ-* → English pray, precarious

Before you move on

Which two verbs so far gave you their stems for free, and what do they have in common? (Fahmidan and porsidan — both end in -idan.) Why does English say pray rather than an inherited word here? (It lost its own and borrowed the root back from Latin.) Source: Wiktionary: پرسیدن.

8.3 کردن کمک — "to help," and the machine on its second run

Say the pair for "to ask." Then the two words meaning "to think," and which half of them is the verb. That half is about to do the same job twice over.

You'll want to know first — one verb in two pieces, once more

کردن کمک — komak kardan — to help

Two words, and you already know the second one. کمک komak is a noun, "help, assistance." From the right: ک k, م m, ک k — the same kâf twice, once joined and once standing free at the word's end.

Behind it sits کردن kardan, doing exactly what it did in fekr kardan. Noun in front, kardan behind, and the pair is a verb. Its present stem is still کن kon-: komak mi-konam, "I help."

This is the point of the pattern. You are not learning a second verb; you are learning a second noun and dropping it into a slot you already own.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

کمک komak is neither inherited Persian nor Arabic. It came from Turkic — Azerbaijani kömək, "help," from Proto-Turkic kömek*. Turkic and Persian have been neighbours for a thousand years, and words crossed both ways.

So everyday Persian vocabulary holds three layers, and you have a word from each. khub, "good," is inherited Iranian. vaqt, "time," inside khoshvaghtam, is Arabic. کمک komak is Turkic. All three are ordinary Persian words today, and none is more Persian than the others.

The verb half is the oldest thing here: کردن kardan on the Indo-European root k*^{w}er-, "to make." A Turkic noun and an Indo-European verb in one phrase — Persian's history in three syllables.

One script note: the ک kâf opening komak is the shape gâf is built from, one bar apart.

Your turn

- Say it: komak kardan — to help
- Split: komak, help — kardan, to do
- Match: fekr kardan and komak kardan — one machine, two nouns
- Say it: the stem still in place — kardan, kon-
- Sort: khub inherited, vaqt Arabic, komak Turkic
- Retrieve: the two words welded inside khoshvaghtam
- Read it: ک in کمک, then the gâf shape — one bar apart

Before you move on

Which half of komak kardan did you already know? (Kardan.) Which of Persian's three vocabulary layers did komak come from? (Turkic.) Name a word from each of the other two. (Khub, inherited; vaqt, Arabic.)

Source: Wiktionary: کمک.

8.4 دوست داشتن — "to love," which Persian says as "to have as friend"

Say the two words meaning "to help," and the pair for "to ask."
This last verb is a compound too — but not with kardan.

You'll want to know first — one verb in two pieces, a new second half

دوست داشتن — dust dâshtan — to like, to love

داشتن dâshtan is the verb, to have, to hold. Its present stem is dâr: the pair is dâshtan, dâr-.

So dust dâshtan is, word for word, to have as friend. Dust dâram is "I love" — literally "I hold [it] a friend," built out of friendship rather than passion.

Notice what changed. kardan made a noun into a doing. داشتن dâshtan makes it a holding. Two light verbs, one pattern.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

Both halves are old, and both have English relatives.
دوست dust goes back through Old Persian *daušt*ā to the Indo-European root ǵews-*, "to taste, to choose." A friend is the one chosen. English inherited it directly as choose; Latin took it as gustus, "taste," giving English gusto and disgust.
داشتن dâshtan continues Old Persian dāraya-, "to hold," from $*d^{h}er$-.
English has no inherited cousin here, but the root fills its borrowings: Latin firmus, "held fast," gave firm; Greek thronos gave throne; Sanskrit built dharma, "that which holds the world together."
So Persian builds "I love you" from choose and hold.

Grammar Lens: what the two chapters add up to Thirteen verbs now, and every one fits one of three shapes.

Compounds — fekr kardan, komak kardan, dust dâshtan: noun plus light verb. -idan verbs — fahmidan, porsidan: stem free. Inherited verbs — budan, raftan, âmadan, goftan, dânestan, khândan, neveshtan, gereftan: stem told, never guessed.
Behind all three: one infinitive ending; one set of personal endings; no gender, no cases, no agreement. The hard part of Persian is a list of stems.

Your turn

All thirteen, from memory.

- Say it: gereftan, gir-; porsidan, pors-; komak kardan; dust dâshtan, dâr-
- Say it: fekr kardan, kon-; fahmidan, fahm-; khândan, khân-; neveshtan, nevis-
- Say it: budan; raftan, rav-; âmadan, â-; goftan, gu-; dânestan, dân-
- Split: dust, friend — dâshtan, to hold
- Sort: which three are compounds, which two are -idan, which eight are inherited
- Connect: dust ← ǵews-* → English choose; gereftan → grab; neveshtan → paint

Before you move on

What does dust dâshtan say word for word? (To have as friend.) Which light verb makes a doing, and which makes a holding? (Kardan; dâshtan.) Now name all thirteen, with a stem for each that has one.

Chapter 9

Please: Water, Bread, Tea, Key

Modes: voice (4) Hands-free start: all 4 lessons.

> By the end of this chapter: I can politely ask for water, bread, tea, or my key in Persian, and I can name the four vocabulary layers those four words come from.
> The chapter closes on kelid, a Greek loan, then runs all four requests back to back — âb, nân, chây, kelid, each with lotfan — and reuses the ezafe from Chapter 2 to ask for kelid-e man, my key.

9.1 آب — water, and Persian's first "please"

The last chapter closed on dâshtan, "to have," stem dâr. This chapter names what to ask for when you do not have it yet.

You'll want to know first — one word

آب — âb — water

Two letters, both already yours: آ, alef with madde, from âmadan; then ب b.

Grammar Lens: your first Persian "please" âb, lotfan. — Water, please.

Name the thing you want, add lotfan, and the request is complete — no verb required. lotfan ends in a small doubled stroke above its alef, called tanvin: an Arabic grammatical ending, pronounced -an, that survives in Persian only inside a short list of frozen Arabic adverbs borrowed whole — lotfan and taghriban, "approximately," are two of them — and plays no part in ordinary Persian spelling. This is the first request this track has built.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

آب continues Old Persian ābp-, from Indo-European *h_2ep-, "water" — the root Sanskrit kept as áp-, still visible today inside a place-name: Punjab is usually explained as this same word, panj âb, "five waters," naming the region's five rivers.
Hindi and Marathi's everyday word for water, pānī, is not this word at all. Sanskrit holds a second, unrelated root for water too — pā-, "to drink," from *peh_3-, the root hiding inside English potion and poison — and it is that second root modern Hindi and Marathi kept for everyday use. آب and pānī are not cousins; they are two different ancient words for the same thing, and Persian happened to keep the older one.

Your turn

- Say it: âb — water
- Say it: âb, lotfan. — water, please
- Connect: âb ← *h_2ep- → Sanskrit áp-, and the -âb inside Punjab
- Contrast: âb against Hindi's pānī — two different old words, not cousins
- Retrieve: dâshtan, dâr- — "to have," from the chapter just closed

Before you move on

Ask for water politely. (Âb, lotfan.) What is the small doubled stroke at the end of lotfan called, and where else does Persian use it? (Tanvin; only inside a few frozen Arabic adverbs.) Is Persian آب related to Hindi's pānī? (No — two separate old words.)
Source: Wiktionary: آب; Wiktionary: lotfan.

9.2 نان — bread, and a root this track cannot trace

Say âb, lotfan. This chapter's second request names the other thing on every Persian table.

You'll want to know first — one word

نان — nân — bread

nân, lotfan. — Bread, please.

Three letters, all already yours: ن ا ن — n, long â, n again.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

نان continues Middle Persian nān, and there this word's trail runs cold: no secure root beyond that form is agreed, and no English cousin can honestly be claimed. Not every word in this book gets a family tree, and this one is named plainly rather than forced into one.
The word travelled anyway, just not by inheritance. Persian نان passed into Hindi-Urdu as nān, and from there into English as naan — the bread on a restaurant menu is this exact word, arriving by borrowing three languages after Persian, not by any shared ancestor.

Your turn

- Say it: nân — bread
- Say it: nân, lotfan. — bread, please
- Name: the one fact this word's history gives you — Middle Persian nān, root beyond that unknown
- Trace it: nân → Hindi-Urdu nān → English naan — a borrowing, not a cousin
- Run through: âb, lotfan — nân, lotfan — two requests back to back

Before you move on

What does نان mean? (Bread.) Does it have a secure Indo-European cousin? (No — the trail runs cold at Middle Persian nān.) Which English word is this same word, borrowed rather than inherited? (Naan, via Hindi-Urdu.)
Source: Wiktionary: نان.

9.3 چای — tea, and the road that gave everyone but Europe the same word

Say nân, lotfan. Here is the drink that usually comes with it.

You'll want to know first — one word

چای — chây — tea

chây, lotfan. — Tea, please.

Three letters, all already yours: چ ch, from chist; long ا â; ی as a closing glide.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

چای is not an inherited Persian word at all — it is a loan, and a comparatively recent one. It comes from Northern Chinese chá, carried overland through Central Asia into Persian, the same road Russian chai and Turkish çay travelled.
The word did not stop at Persian. چای itself passed onward into Urdu as chāy, the same three-step road: Chinese into Persian into Urdu. Tea that instead reached Europe by sea carried a different, southern-Chinese form, which is why English says tea and French says thé rather than chai: one drink, two words, sorted by whether it travelled by land or by water.

Your turn

- Say it: chây — tea
- Say it: chây, lotfan. — tea, please

- Name: the road — Chinese chá → Persian chây → Urdu chāy
- Contrast: chây, which travelled by land, against tea, which travelled by sea
- Run through: âb, lotfan — nân, lotfan — chây, lotfan

Before you move on

Which language gave Persian چای? (Chinese, overland.) Which language borrowed this exact Persian word onward? (Urdu, as chāy.) Why does English say tea instead? (It arrived by sea, carrying a different Chinese form.)
Source: Wiktionary: چای.

9.4 کلید — key, a Greek word Persian has held for two thousand years

Say chây, lotfan. Then recall the small linking -e the first sentence taught inside esm-e man — you will need it again in a moment.

You'll want to know first — one word

کلید — kelid — key

Four letters, all already yours: ک k, from کمک; ل l; ی long i; د d.

Grammar Lens: a possessive request, built from an old part kelid-e man, lotfan. — My key, please.

No new grammar here — this reuses the ezafe -e exactly as esm-e man did, now linking a household word to its owner instead of a name. A request can carry an owner the same way a name did.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

کلید is not inherited Persian at all — it is a loan from Greek kleidíon, "little key," one of a handful of Greek words that entered Persian in the Hellenistic centuries after Alexander's conquest, when Greek-speaking rulers governed Iranian land for generations. The parent word, kleís, shares its Indo-European root with Latin claudere, "to close" — the root behind English close, conclude, and exclude. This chapter's four words now stand for all three of Persian's vocabulary layers: inherited âb, an untraceable nân, an overland Chinese loan in chây, and a Greek loan in کلید.

Your turn

- Say it: kelid — key; then kelid-e man, lotfan — my key, please
- Connect: kelid ← Greek kleidíon; the same old root in Latin claudere → English close, conclude, exclude
- Run through: âb, nân, chây, kelid — each with , lotfan
- Sort: which of the four is inherited, which is untraceable, which travelled by land, which came from Greek
- Retrieve: the ezafe -e from esm-e man, now on kelid-e man

Before you move on

Which language did Persian borrow کلید from, and when? (Greek, after Alexander.) Say "my key, please." (Kelid-e man, lotfan.) Name all four polite requests this chapter built. (Âb, nân, chây, kelid, each with lotfan.)

Chapter 10

Mother, Father, Brother, Daughter

Modes: 🚗 voice (4) 🚗 Hands-free start: all 4 lessons.

> By the end of this chapter: I can name my mother, father, brother, and daughter in Persian, the four secure English cousins Chapter 6 named without teaching.
> The chapter closes on dokhtar, daughter, then runs all four family words back to back and reuses the ezafe from esm-e man ast and kelid-e man to say dokhtar-e man, my daughter.

10.1 مادر — mother, a word this track already promised you

The budan lesson traced it back to English be, and in passing named four plainest inherited cousins the track had not yet taught as their own lessons: مادر, pedar, barâdar, dokhtar. This chapter and the next finally give each one its own lesson, starting here.

You'll want to know first — one word

مادر — mâdar — mother

Four letters, all already yours: م ا د ر — m, long â, d, r.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

مادر continues Middle Persian mādar, from Indo-European méh₂tēr* — the same root English wore down to mother, German to Mutter, Latin to māter (giving English maternal), and Sanskrit to mātṛ. Few words in any language family stay this recognisable after four thousand years; a mother is called almost the same thing across most of Eurasia because small children the world over reach for the same easy sounds.

Your turn

- Say it: mâdar — mother
- Connect: mâdar ← méh₂tēr* → English mother, Latin māter, Sanskrit mātṛ
- Retrieve: kelid-e man, lotfan — my key, please
- Name: which four family words the budan lesson promised, and which one this lesson delivers

Before you move on

What does مادر mean? (Mother.) Which lesson first named it as an English cousin, without teaching it as its own word? (The budan lesson, in passing.) Which three family words does the track still owe you? (pedar, barâdar, dokhtar.)
Source: Wiktionary: مادر.

10.2 پدر — father, mâdar's oldest partner

Say مادر, and its English cousin. This lesson's word has kept the same partnership for four thousand years.

You'll want to know first — one word

پدر — pedar — father

Three letters, all already yours: پ p, from porsidan; د d; ر r.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

پدر continues Middle Persian pidar, from Indo-European ph₂tḗr* — the direct cousin of English father, German Vater, and Latin pater (giving English paternal, patriot). مادر and پدر are not just similar in meaning; they are built the same way, both old Indo-European kinship words carrying a shared -ar/-tar ending that once meant something close to "the one who [does the kin role]."

Your turn

- Say it: pedar — father
- Connect: pedar ← ph₂tḗr* → English father, Latin pater
- Pair: mâdar — pedar, both carrying the same old kinship ending
- Run through: mâdar, pedar — mother, father

Before you move on

What does پدر mean? (Father.) Which English word is it the direct cousin of? (Father, via pater.) What ending do مادر and پدر share? (An old kinship ending, -ar/-tar.)
Source: Wiktionary: پدر.

10.3 برادر — brother, the cousin that never drifted

Say مادر and pedar. One family word from the budan lesson's list is still owed to you, and it is the sibling one.

You'll want to know first — one word

برادر — barâdar — brother

Five letters, all already yours: ب ر ا د ر — b, r, long â, d, r again. Notice ر opens and closes the word.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

برادر continues Middle Persian brād(ar), from Indo-European bʰréh₂tēr* — the direct cousin of English brother, German Bruder, and Latin frāter (giving English fraternal). Unlike some kinship cousins, whose meanings narrow or shift as they travel, brother has meant exactly the same thing in every branch that kept it, for as long as anyone can trace it: this is as clean an inheritance as the family survives with.

Your turn

- Say it: barâdar — brother
- Connect: barâdar ← $*b^h réh_2tēr$ → English brother, Latin frāter
- Run through: mâdar, pedar, barâdar — mother, father, brother
- Name: the one word the budan lesson still owes you

Before you move on

What does برادر mean? (Brother.) Which English word is it the direct cousin of? (Brother.) Which family word from the budan lesson's list is still owed? (dokhtar, daughter.)
Source: Wiktionary: برادر.

10.4 دختر — daughter, and the family the budan lesson promised is complete

Say barâdar. Say it: esm-e man ... ast once more — the very first sentence this track ever built, and the pattern this lesson reuses to close a family

You'll want to know first — one word

دختر — dokhtar — daughter

Four letters, all already yours: د خ ت ر — d, kh, t, r.

Grammar Lens: naming a family member as your own dokhtar-e man — my daughter

The same ezafe -e from esm-e man and kelid-e man links a family word to its owner exactly the way it linked a name and a request. One grammar habit, three completely different kinds of noun.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

دختر continues Middle Persian duxtar, from Indo-European *$d^{h}ugh_{2}t\acute{e}r$ — the direct cousin of English daughter and German Tochter. An earlier lesson named four inherited family cousins in passing — مادر, pedar, barâdar, دختر — while it was really teaching budan. This chapter and the last have now taught all four as full lessons: a promise made early, kept three chapters later.

Your turn

- Say it: dokhtar — daughter; then dokhtar-e man — my daughter
- Connect: dokhtar ← *$d^{h}ugh_{2}t\bar{e}r$ → English daughter
- Run through: mâdar, pedar, barâdar, dokhtar — all four, from memory
- Retrieve: esm-e man … ast, the first sentence this track built, and its ezafe
- Name: which of the four family words is the odd one out in sound — دختر's kh, where the other three have none

Before you move on

Name all four family words this chapter and the last have taught, in order. (Mâdar, pedar, barâdar, dokhtar.) Say "my daughter." (Dokhtar-e man.) Which earlier sentence used the same ezafe? (esm-e man … ast, the very first sentence this track built.)
Source: Wiktionary: دختر.

Chapter 11

Eye, Hand, Foot, Tongue

Modes: 🚗 voice (4) 🚗 Hands-free start: all 4 lessons.

> By the end of this chapter: I can name my eye, hand, foot, and tongue in Persian, and I can say zabân for both tongue and language — the word for the thing this whole track teaches.
> The chapter and the tranche close on zabân, tongue and language together, then run a short scene built from every chapter so far: the name exchange, the wellbeing question, this chapter's own requests and family and body words, and khodâhâfez to close.

11.1 چشم — eye, and what "how are you" was really pointing at

> Say dokhtar. Say it: hâl-e shomâ chetor ast? once more
> An earlier lesson asked about your hâl, your state, but never once named the parts of you that state belongs to. This chapter does.

You'll want to know first — one word

> چشم — cheshm — eye

Three letters, all already yours: چ ch, from chist; ش sh, from شما; م m.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

چشم continues Middle Persian čašm, and Old Persian had čašman-, "eye" (EtymDB). EtymDB takes it back to an Indo-Iranian word for the eye; its cousin is Sanskrit cakṣus, "eye," from a verb meaning "to see." English eye comes from a different root, and so do spy and spectacle: no English cousin is claimed here.

Your turn

- Say it: cheshm — eye
- Connect: cheshm ← Middle Persian čašm ← Old Persian čašman-
- Retrieve: hâl-e shomâ chetor ast? — the question this chapter's body words could actually answer
- Run through: mâdar, pedar, barâdar, dokhtar, cheshm — five family and body words in one breath

Before you move on

What does چشم mean? (Eye.) Which Middle Persian word does it continue? (Čašm.) Which earlier question could a body-part chapter actually answer? (Hâl-e shomâ chetor ast?)
Source: Wiktionary: چشم.

11.2 دست — hand, and a sound law that hides a cousin in plain sight

Say cheshm. This lesson's word looks nothing like its closest Indo-Iranian relative — and that mismatch is not an accident.

You'll want to know first — one word

دست — dast — hand

Three letters, all already yours: د س ت — d, s, t.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

دست continues Old Persian dastā-, from Indo-European ǵʰes-to-*, "hand." Sanskrit's word for hand, hasta, is the very same root — and so, further out, is Greek kheír, which English kept indirectly in surgery (literally "hand-work") and chiropractic ("done by hand"). Old Persian's d, Avestan's z, and Sanskrit's h look like three unrelated sounds, but they are the completely regular Indo-Iranian outcome of the same ancestral sound in each of the three branches — the kind of correspondence a false cousin never has, and a real one always does.

Your turn

- Say it: dast — hand
- Connect: dast ← ǵʰes-to-* → Sanskrit hasta, Greek kheír → English surgery, chiropractic
- Contrast: Persian d, Avestan z, Sanskrit h — three sounds, one regular law
- Run through: cheshm, dast — eye, hand

Before you move on

What does دست mean? (Hand.) Which Sanskrit word is its direct cousin? (hasta.) Which two English words trace to the same root through Greek kheír? (Surgery, chiropractic.)
Source: Wiktionary: دست.

11.3 پا — foot, the plainest cousin in the whole track

Say cheshm and dast. One more body word closes this chapter, and for once its history needs no caution at all.

You'll want to know first — one word

پا — pâ — foot

Two letters, both already yours: پ p, from pedar; long ا â.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

پا continues Old Persian pād-, from Indo-European ped-/pod-, "foot." Unlike dast, this cousin needs no sound-law explanation to see: English foot, Latin pes/pedis (pedal, pedestrian), Greek pous/podos (podiatry, tripod), and Sanskrit pāda all sit close enough to hear the family resemblance directly. Some Indo-European cousins take a page of sound changes to prove; this one barely needs a sentence.

Your turn

- Say it: pâ — foot
- Connect: pâ ← ped-/pod- → English foot, Latin pes, Greek pous, Sanskrit pāda
- Run through: cheshm, dast, pâ — eye, hand, foot
- Name: which of this chapter's three cousins needed a sound law, and which one did not

Before you move on

What does پا mean? (Foot.) Name four language families that keep a recognisable version of this word. (English, Latin, Greek, Sanskrit.) Which earlier body word needed a sound law to prove its cousin? (dast, hand.)
Source: Wiktionary: پا.

11.4 زبان — tongue, and language, and everything this track has built

Say cheshm, dast, pâ — eye, hand, foot. One organ this list has left out names something bigger than itself.

You'll want to know first — one word, one new letter

زبان — zabân — tongue, and also language

Four letters, three of them already yours — ب ا ن — plus one this track has never needed before: ز ze, an ordinary letter from the inherited Arabic set, read simply as English z. ز-ب-ا-ن.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

زبان continues Middle Persian zabān, tracing to the ancient Indo-European word for "tongue." English tongue is the same root, worn down at home. Latin took the same root and, by a well-documented but still debated d-to-l shift, turned it into lingua — the ancestor of English language and linguistics. Persian, like English, never split the organ from the ability: zabân-e fârsi, "the Persian tongue," is simply the Persian language — the same word this whole track has been teaching you to use.

Your turn — everything this track has taught

One short scene, built entirely from independently learned pieces, chapter by chapter:

- Say it: esm-e man ... ast — the very first sentence this track built
- Say it: shomâ against to — the register this track built next
- Say it: hâl-e shomâ chetor ast? — the careful question that followed
- Say it: khubam — the reply that answered it
- Say it: âb, lotfan / kelid-e man, lotfan — this chapter's own requests
- Name: mâdar, pedar, barâdar, dokhtar, cheshm, dast, pâ, zabân — eight new words, three chapters
- Say it: khodâ hâfez, and recall what it leaves unsaid — no verb, just the two halves an earlier lesson joined
- Connect: zabân ← old "tongue" word → English tongue, Latin lingua → language, linguistics

Before you move on

What does زبان mean, in both of its senses? (Tongue, and language.) Which new letter did it need? (ژ, ze.) Which two English words trace to the same root by a disputed sound shift? (Tongue directly; language and linguistics through Latin's d-to-l turn.) What is zabân-e fârsi? (The Persian language — the one this whole track teaches.)

Chapter 12

Name, Heart, Door, Book

Modes: 🚗 voice (4) 🚗 Hands-free start: all 4 lessons.

> By the end of this chapter: I can say name, heart, door, and book in Persian, and I can tell which of the four is inherited and which is a later Arabic loan.
> The chapter closes on ketâb, an Arabic loan, then runs all four words back to back — nâm, del, dar, ketâb — sorts them by vocabulary layer, and rebuilds the earlier name exchange the reappearance of nâm reopens.

12.1 نام — name, the word Persian never borrowed

> Say zabân, starting on its letter ze. Then say the very first sentence this track ever built, esm-e man … ast. Both words in that sentence for "name" are about to get company.

You'll want to know first — one word

> نام — nâm — name

Three letters, all already yours: ن ا م — n, long â, m.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

نام continues Old Persian nāma, from Indo-European *h_1*nómn*, "name" — one of the most widely shared words in the whole family:

English kept it as name, Greek as ónoma (→ onomastics), Italian as nome, and Sanskrit as nāman. اسم esm, the word this track taught first, is a separate, later Arabic loan for the identical idea — so Persian now holds two words for "name," inherited and borrowed, sitting side by side the way khub and vaqt already showed the track's vocabulary layers working.

Your turn

- Say it: nâm — name
- Connect: nâm ← h₁nómn* → English name, Greek ónoma, Sanskrit nāman
- Contrast: نام, inherited, against اسم, the Arabic loan the name-exchange lesson taught first
- Retrieve: zabân — tongue, and language, the word that closed the last chapter — and its English cousin, tongue

Before you move on

What does نام mean? (Name.) Which other Persian word means the same thing, and which language did it arrive through? (اسم, through Arabic.) Which English word shares نام's own root? (Name.)
Source: Wiktionary: نام.

12.2 دل — heart

Say nâm, and its English cousin. This lesson's word has an even more famous one.

You'll want to know first — one word

دل — del — heart

Two letters, both already yours: د ل — d, l.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

دل continues Middle Persian dil, from the ancient Indo-European word for heart, ḱḗr* — the same root English wore down to heart, Armenian kept as sirt, and Sanskrit built into hṛdaya. Persian uses دل far beyond anatomy, the way English leans on heart for courage and feeling rather than only the organ — a later chapter's word for "want" will lean on it too.

Your turn

- Say it: del — heart
- Connect: del ← ḱḗr* → English heart, Sanskrit hṛdaya, Armenian sirt
- Run through: nâm, del — name, heart
- Retrieve: dokhtar — daughter, from a few lessons back, and its English cousin, daughter itself

Before you move on

What does دل mean? (Heart.) Which English word is its direct cousin? (Heart.) Name one other language that kept the same root. (Sanskrit hṛdaya, or Armenian sirt.)
Source: Wiktionary: دل.

12.3 در — door

Say دل, and the root it shares with heart. This lesson's word shares its own root with an equally ordinary English word.

You'll want to know first — one word

در — dar — door

Two letters, both already yours: د ر — d, r.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

در continues Old Persian duvar-, "door, gate," from Indo-European *d^h*wer-*. Few Indo-European words are this well attested across every branch of the family at once: English door, German Tür, Latin foris (→ foreign, "outside the door"), Greek thýra, and Sanskrit dvāra all continue the identical ancient word. در is Persian's contribution to a cognate set most Indo-European languages still carry.

Your turn

- Say it: dar — door
- Connect: dar ← *d^h*wer-* → English door, German Tür, Latin foris, Sanskrit dvāra
- Run through: nâm, del, dar — name, heart, door

Before you move on

What does در mean? (Door.) Name three other languages that kept the same root. (English door, German Tür, Sanskrit dvāra, among others.)
Source: Wiktionary: در.

12.4 کتاب — book, and the name exchange this chapter reopens

Say dar, and the four languages that share its root. This chapter's last word breaks that pattern completely.

You'll want to know first — one word

کتاب — ketâb — book

Four letters, all already yours: ک ت ا ب — k, t, long â, b.

Grammar Lens: a possessed object, the pattern one more time

ketâb-e man, lotfan. — My book, please.

The same ezafe -e from esm-e man, kelid-e man, and dokhtar-e man links a fourth kind of noun to its owner. Four different words, one grammar habit.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

کتاب is not inherited Persian at all: it is borrowed whole from Arabic kitāb, "book," built on the three-consonant root k-t-b, "to write." Persian's four new words this chapter show its vocabulary layers running in both directions at once — nâm is inherited where اسم, taught first, is Arabic; کتاب is Arabic where Persian has no single inherited word of its own for the idea. del and dar are older still, each carrying an Indo-European root beside a whole set of English cousins.

Your turn — the chapter, then the name exchange it reopens

- Say it: ketâb — book; then ketâb-e man, lotfan — my book, please
- Run through: nâm, del, dar, ketâb — all four of this chapter's words
- Sort: which words are inherited, and which one is Arabic
- Rebuild: shomâ / to — the register choice; esm-e shomâ chist? — the question, joining chi and ast; khoshvaghtam — the reply that closes an introduction
- Connect: nâm, this chapter's own name-word, back to the exchange that first taught اسم
- Retrieve: pâ — foot, one more body word from a few lessons back

Before you move on

Which language did Persian borrow کتاب from? (Arabic.) Say "my book, please." (Ketâb-e man, lotfan.) Which of this chapter's four words is inherited Persian, and which is the Arabic loan? (nâm, del, dar inherited; کتاب Arabic.) Which earlier word for "name" does nâm now stand beside? (اسم.)
Source: Wiktionary: کتاب.

Chapter 13

Sky, Sun, Moon, Star, Rain

Modes: 🚗 voice (5) 🚗 Hands-free start: all 5 lessons.

> By the end of this chapter: I can name the sky, sun, moon, star, and rain in Persian, and I can say which of those words has no established English cousin.
> The chapter closes on bârân, a word with no English cousin, then runs all five sky words back to back and rebuilds the careful wellbeing question the weather now follows in ordinary small talk.

13.1 آسمان — sky

> Say ketâb, and which language it came from. This chapter turns from things in the house to the world above it, starting with the biggest word of all.

You'll want to know first — one word

آسمان — âsemân — sky

Five letters, all already yours: آ س م ا ن — alef with madde, s, m, long â, n.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

آسمان continues Old Persian asmānam, from Indo-European $h_2$ék̑mō, "stone." Sanskrit kept the plain sense as aśman, "stone," while Avestan's cousin word already carried both meanings, "stone" and "sky," at once. Picturing the sky as a stone dome overhead was a widespread Indo-European habit, not a Persian invention — one old word doing two jobs, the way zabân later did for tongue and language.

Your turn

- Say it: âsemân — sky
- Connect: âsemân ← h₂éḱmō* → Sanskrit aśman, "stone"
- Name: the old Indo-European habit آسمان preserves — picturing the sky as stone
- Retrieve: zabân — tongue and language, with its letter ze

Before you move on

What does آسمان mean? (Sky.) What did its root originally mean, and which Sanskrit word still keeps that older sense? (Stone; aśman.)
Source: Wiktionary: آسمان.

13.2 خورشید — sun, a word built from two old pieces

Say âsemân, and the root sense it once carried. Picture the sky, and this lesson names what is in it.

You'll want to know first — one word

خورشید — khorshid — sun

Six letters, all already yours: د ی ش ر و خ — kh, و carrying its learned o value, r, sh, long i, d.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

خورشید is a compound, not a single old root. Its first half, خور khor, "sun," descends from the ancient Indo-European word for the sun, sóh₂wl* — the same distant root behind English sun, Latin sol (→ solar), Greek hḗlios (→ heliotrope), and Sanskrit sūrya, though it reached Persian by a completely different branch of the family. Its second half, شید shid, "shining," is an unrelated word that Avestan had already paired with خور long before Persian existed.

Your turn

- Say it: khorshid — sun
- Split: خور, sun — شید, shining
- Connect: خور ← sóh₂wl* → English sun, Latin sol, Greek hḗlios, Sanskrit sūrya
- Run through: âsemân, khorshid — sky, sun

Before you move on

What does خورشید mean, and what are its two parts? (Sun; خور "sun" plus شید "shining.") Which English word shares خور's distant root? (Sun.)
Source: Wiktionary: خورشید.

13.3 ماه — moon, and month

Say khorshid, and the two old pieces fused inside it. The sky's other light gives Persian one more word doing double duty.

You'll want to know first — one word

ماه — mâh — moon, and also month

Three letters, all already yours: م ا ه — m, long â, h.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

ماه continues Old Persian māha-, from Indo-European méh₁ns*, "moon." The same root split into two related English words, moon and month — a month was, for most of human history, one full cycle of the moon — and Persian's single word still holds both senses together, the way zabân later holds "tongue" and "language" in one word. Latin kept the root as mensis (→ month, menstrual), Greek as mēn, and Sanskrit as māsa.

Your turn

- Say it: mâh — moon, and month
- Connect: mâh ← měh₁ns* → English moon and month, Latin mensis, Sanskrit māsa
- Run through: âsemân, khorshid, mâh — sky, sun, moon

Before you move on

What two English words does ماه's root split into? (Moon and month.) Which earlier Persian word did the same double duty for tongue and language? (zabân.)

13.4 ستاره — star

Say ماه, and the two English words its root split into. One more light in the sky, and a new small spelling habit.

You'll want to know first — one word, one small spelling habit

ستاره — setâre — star

Five letters, all already yours: س ت ا ر ه — s, t, long â, r, and a final ه read as the vowel -e rather than as a consonant — the first time this track has met ه doing that particular job.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

ستاره continues Middle Persian stārag, built on the old Iranian star- that Avestan records, from Indo-European h₂stḗr*, "star." Few Indo-European roots survive this cleanly across the whole family: English star, Latin stella (→ stellar, constellation), Greek astron (→ astronomy, disaster — "ill-starred"), and Persian's own ستاره all continue the identical ancient word, alongside dar's door and ماه's moon as the tranche's clearest cousins.

Your turn

- Say it: setâre — star
- Connect: setâre ← h₂stḗr* → English star, Latin stella, Greek astron
- Read it: the final ه in ستاره as -e, not as a consonant
- Run through: âsemân, khorshid, mâh, setâre — sky, sun, moon, star
- Retrieve: dar — door, and its own well-attested cousin set

Before you move on

What does ستاره mean? (Star.) How is its final ه read? (As the vowel -e, not a consonant.) Name two other languages whose word for star shares the same root. (English star, Latin stella, or Greek astron.)
Source: Wiktionary: ستاره.

13.5 باران — rain, and the wellbeing question this chapter answers differently

Say setâre, and its root's three attested cousins. Not every sky word gets to keep company like that.

You'll want to know first — one word

باران — bârân — rain

Five letters, all already yours: ب ا ر ا ن — b, long â, r, long â, n.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

باران continues Middle Persian wārān, from Indo-Iranian wáHr*, "water, rain," itself from Indo-European weh₁r-*, "water." Its cousins stayed close to home: Avestan vāra, "rain," and Sanskrit vār, "water," share the identical root. English rain is not part of this family at all — its own origin is disputed and confined to the Germanic languages, with no secure Indo-European cousin beyond them — so, as with raftan and goftan far earlier, the honest answer here is that no English cousin is claimed.

Grammar Lens: what small talk about the sky follows

Weather small talk in Persian commonly follows the wellbeing exchange, the same slot English fills right after "how are you?" Rebuild the question: hâl-e shomâ chetor ast?, careful ast, not a contraction, then its reply, khubam, mamnun — a shape a sky word can now attach to.

Your turn — every sky word, then the exchange it follows

- Say it: bârân — rain
- Connect: bârân ← weh₁r-* → Sanskrit vār, Avestan vāra — no English cousin
- Run through: âsemân, khorshid, mâh, setâre, bârân — all five sky words
- Rebuild: hâl-e shomâ chetor ast? and its reply khubam, mamnun

Before you move on

What does باران mean? (Rain.) Does it share a root with English rain? (No.) Which two Indo-Iranian languages keep the closest cousins? (Avestan, Sanskrit.) Name all five sky words. (Âsemân, khorshid, mâh, setâre, bârân.)

Chapter 14

Sister, Son, Man, Woman, Friend

Modes: 🚗 voice (5) 🚗 Hands-free start: all 5 lessons.

> By the end of this chapter: I can name my sister, son, and friend in Persian, tell man and woman apart, and open and close a short interaction with all of them.
> The chapter and the tranche close on dust, friend, then run all five people-words back to back and rebuild a complete short interaction with a friend: a polite request for tea, a request for a key, and the standard farewell both voices share.

14.1 خواهر — sister, the family word the earlier tranche skipped

> Say bârân, and whether it has an English cousin. The sky words are done; the family the earlier tranche built — mâdar, pedar, barâdar, dokhtar — is missing exactly one member.

You'll want to know first — one word, a familiar silent letter

> خواهر — khâhar — sister

Five letters, all already yours: خ و ا ه ر. The و here is silent, exactly the pattern khândan taught: written after خ and before ا, never pronounced. Say it kh-â-har.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

خواهر continues Middle Persian xwāhar, from Indo-European swésōr*, "sister" — as secure a cognate as barâdar's own bʰréh₂tēr*. English kept it as sister (through Old Norse, replacing the native Old English form), Latin as soror (→ sorority), and Sanskrit as svasṛ. mâdar, pedar, barâdar, dokhtar, khâhar now give the track all five of Indo-European's plainest kinship words.

Your turn

- Say it: khâhar — sister
- Connect: khâhar ← swésōr* → English sister, Latin soror, Sanskrit svasṛ
- Read it: the silent و in خواهر, the same pattern khândan taught
- Name: all five family words this track now holds — mâdar, pedar, barâdar, dokhtar, khâhar
- Retrieve: ketâb — book, from a few lessons back

Before you move on

What does خواهر mean? (Sister.) Which letter in it is silent, and which earlier word taught the same pattern? (و; khândan.) Which English word is its direct cousin? (Sister.)
Source: Wiktionary: خواهر.

14.2 پسر — son, dokhtar's missing counterpart

Say khâhar, and its secure English cousin. Then say barâdar — its own family tranche taught dokhtar, "daughter," but never gave her brother's counterpart a lesson of its own, until now.

You'll want to know first — one word

پسر — pesar — son

Three letters, all already yours: پ س ر — پ pe, from porsidan, then s, r.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

پسر continues Old Persian puça, cognate with Sanskrit putra, "son" — an Indo-Iranian word Persian and Sanskrit still share with each other. English son is not part of this family: it descends from an entirely different Indo-European root, so — as with bârân and raftan before it — no English cousin is claimed here. پسر and dokhtar now give the track a complete pair for "son" and "daughter," even though only one of the two has an English relative.

Your turn

- Say it: pesar — son
- Connect: pesar ← Old Persian puça → Sanskrit putra — no English cousin
- Run through: barâdar, pesar — brother, son — the two words this pair now completes
- Run through: khâhar, pesar — sister, son

Before you move on

What does پسر mean? (Son.) Which Sanskrit word is its direct cousin? (Putra.) Does English son share the same root? (No.) Source: Wiktionary: پسر.

14.3 مرد — man, but its root says "mortal"

Say pesar, and the Sanskrit word it shares a root with. This lesson's word looks like it should be an easy English cousin. It is not.

You'll want to know first — one word

مرد — mard — man

Three letters, all already yours: م ر د — m, r, d.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

مرد continues Middle Persian mard, from Indo-European mer-*, "to die." Its literal sense is not "man" at all — it is "mortal," "one who dies." The same root gives Latin mortuus, "dead" (→ English mortal, mortician), Greek brotós (→ ambrosia, "not mortal"), and Sanskrit martya. English man looks like an obvious match for مرد and is not one — it descends from a completely different root — so this is one place where guessing a cousin from sound alone would mislead rather than help.

Your turn

- Say it: mard — man
- Connect: mard ← mer-* → Latin mortuus, mortal; Greek brotós; Sanskrit martya — not English man
- Run through: pesar, mard — son, man

Before you move on

What does مرد mean? (Man.) What does its root literally mean, and which English word keeps that sense? (Mortal; mortal itself.) Does English man share the same root? (No — a false friend.) Source: Wiktionary: مرد.

14.4 زن — woman, a root hiding behind a royal title

Say mard, and why it is not a cousin of English man. This lesson's word finds its English cousin in an unexpected place.

You'll want to know first — one word

زن — zan — woman

Two letters, both already yours: ز ن — ز ze, from zabân, then n.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

زن continues Middle Persian zan, from Indo-European gʷḗn(h₂)*-, "woman." English kept the same root, but only inside a narrowed, elevated word: queen was once simply "woman," the way mard narrowed "mortal" down to "man." Greek kept the plain sense directly as gynē (→ gynecology), and Russian as žena. mard and زن give the track its first pair of person words that are not family roles.

Your turn

- Say it: zan — woman
- Connect: zan ← gʷḗn(h₂)*- → English queen, Greek gynē
- Run through: mard, zan — man, woman
- Contrast: mard narrowed from "mortal"; زن widened English's cousin down to royalty alone
- Retrieve: setâre — star, one more well-attested cousin

Before you move on

What does زن mean? (Woman.) Which English word is its cousin, and what did that word originally mean before it narrowed? (Queen; simply "woman.") Which Greek word shares the same root? (Gynē.)
Source: Wiktionary: زن.

14.5 دوست — friend, and everything this tranche has built

Say mard, zan — man, woman. One more person word closes the tranche, and it is a word this track has half-taught already.

You'll want to know first — one word, already half-known

دوست — dust — friend

Four letters, all already yours: د و س ت — d, long u, s, t. The compound verb for "to love" already ran on this exact word; here it stands alone, as the person it names.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

دوست goes back through Old Persian dauštā to Indo-European ǵews-*, "to taste, to choose" — a friend is the one chosen. English inherited the root directly as choose; Latin took it as gustus, "taste," giving English gusto and disgust. The compound-verb lesson that first taught this root only ever used دوست glued to dâshtan; this is its first lesson as a free-standing noun.

Your turn — the tranche, start to finish

One short scene, built entirely from independently learned pieces:

- Say it: dust — friend; then khâhar, pesar, mard, zan, dust — all five people-words this closing chapter taught
- Connect: dust ← ǵews-* → English choose, Latin gustus
- Say it: châ̂y, lotfan — offer your friend tea in the bârân, rain, reusing the very first polite request this track built
- Say it: kelid-e man, lotfan — and ask a friend to pass your key
- Say it: hâfez — guardian, protector — the Arabic-rooted half of a farewell you have used since your very first complete exchange
- Say it: joined khodâ hâfez, and recall what it leaves unsaid — no verb, just two halves fused into one wish
- Run through: Salâm! Hâl-e shomâ chetor ast? … Khubam, mamnun. … Khodâ hâfez. … Khodâ hâfez. — the exact four-line interaction a friend opens and closes

Before you move on

What does دوست mean on its own? (Friend.) Which compound verb already ran on this exact word? (Dust dâshtan, "to love.") Name all five people-words this closing chapter taught, in order. (Khâhar, pesar, mard, zan, dust.) How does a friend close the four-line interaction? (khodâ hâfez, said by both voices.)

Chapter 15

Nine Letters, and the Words You Already Knew

Modes: voice (1) eyes (1) pen (9) Hands-free start: none of the 11 lessons.

> By the end of this chapter: I can write nine Perso-Arabic letters from memory, read salâm, bale, na, mamnun, nân, nâm and mâh off the page rather than from the romanization, and explain why Persian leaves its short vowels unwritten.
> Seven words the book had only ever given by ear, read letter by letter from the right – and the reason a Persian word can be read only once you have heard it.

15.1 ا — one stroke, and the direction of the page

Return to the right-to-left direction and the one alef stroke you first copied beside salâm. Now make both durable before adding a second letter.

Script — first, which way the page runs

English marches left to right. Persian marches right to left.

Your pen starts at the right edge of a word and travels towards the left. So in a Persian word the letter you meet first is the rightmost one, and the letter you meet last is the leftmost — the exact reverse of what your eye has been trained on for your whole reading life.

This takes a few minutes to stop feeling strange and then stops mattering entirely. Numbers, incidentally, still run left to right, which surprises people more than the letters do.

Script — the letter itself

ا

One downstroke. That is the whole letter, and there is nothing in the alphabet simpler. Draw it from the top down, straight, and lift.

Its name is alef. What it sounds like is a longer story than what it looks like, and this book will take that slowly: for now, treat alef as the letter that carries a long â, the vowel in English father.

Your turn

- Write it: ا — one stroke, top to bottom
- Say it: â, the vowel of father
- Point to: the right edge of a Persian word, where your pen would begin

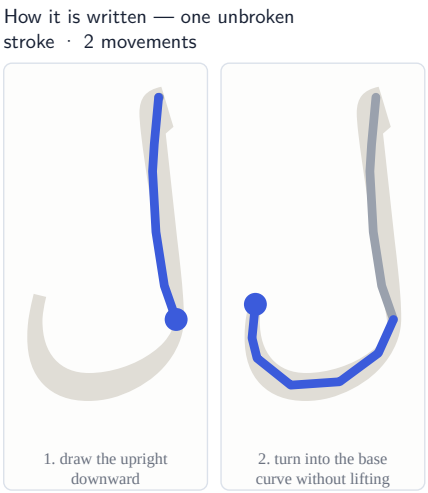

Before you move on

How many strokes in alef? (One.)

15.2 ل — alef, with a bowl at its foot

Write ا. One stroke, top to bottom.

Script — the shape

How ل is written, stroke by stroke

ل

Start exactly as you started alef — a tall stroke coming down — and then, instead of lifting, swing left into a shallow bowl at the foot and come back up a little.

One movement, no pen lift. If you can write ا you are most of the way to ل already; the difference is what happens at the bottom.

Its name is lâm and it says l, as in English long.

Your turn

- Write it: ا, then ل — the same descent, and then the bowl
- Say it: l

Before you move on

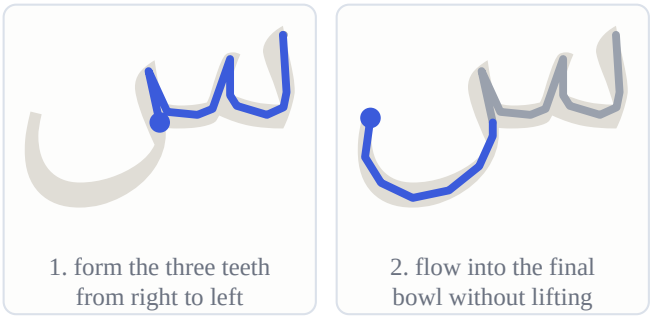

Do you lift the pen between the stroke and the bowl? (No — one movement.)

15.3 س — three teeth, then a bowl

Write ل. Descent, then bowl.

Script — the shape

How it is written — one unbroken stroke · 2 movements

This order is attested, not standardised; the source records where it varies.

How س is written, stroke by stroke

س

Three small teeth — short upward points in a row — and then the line drops into a bowl and comes back up, the same kind of bowl you drew on lâm.

Remember you are working right to left: the first tooth you draw is the rightmost one.

All of it is one movement. No lifts at all.

Its name is sin and it says s, as in English see.

Your turn

- Write it: س — three teeth from the right, then the bowl, without lifting
- Say it: s

Before you move on

Which tooth do you draw first? (The rightmost.)

15.4 م — a loop, and a tail below the line

Write س. Three teeth, then the bowl.

Script — the shape

This order is attested, not standardised; the source records where it varies.

How م is written, stroke by stroke

م

A small closed loop sitting on the line, and from it a tail dropping straight down below the line.

The loop is small and round; keep it tight, or it starts to look like other letters you will meet later. The tail is what makes mim unmistakable standing on its own — very few letters drop below the line, and your eye will learn to use that. Joined into the middle of a word the tail is trimmed away and the loop is what survives, which is the same trimming you will meet everywhere.

One movement, no lift.

Its name is mim and it says m.

Your turn

- Write it: م — the small loop, then the tail dropping below the line
- Say it: m

Before you move on

Is the loop open or closed? (Closed.)

15.5 Letters that hold hands, and two that will not

Write س, then م. Four letters are now yours.

Script — the running line

Persian is not written as separate letters sitting side by side. Letters join, running into one another along a single line, the way English cursive does — except that in Persian it is not a style. It is the ordinary way to write, and printed text does it too.

Because they join, most letters change shape depending on where they sit: a letter at the start of a joined run, one in the middle, one at the end, and one standing alone can all look different. They are the same letter.

That sounds like four times the work. It is not, and here is why: the changes are almost always the same trimming. A letter's identifying part stays, and the finishing flourish is cut short so the next letter can begin.

Look at sin, which you can already write:

alone: س — in the middle of a run: ـسـ

The three teeth survive. The bowl is what gets trimmed away.

Script — and the letters that refuse

Now the rule that saves you the most trouble.

A few letters join to the letter before them, but never to the letter after. They connect on the right, and refuse on the left, so the run breaks and the next letter starts fresh as though beginning a new word.

alef is one of them. So when you meet a gap in the middle of a Persian word, it is very often not a gap at all — it is one of these non-joining letters doing exactly what it always does.

That single fact turns a page of Persian from an unbroken puzzle into something with visible seams.

What you've built

Four letters, and they spell a word you have been saying since the very first lesson:

Two things to notice. The short vowel between s and l is not written — Persian normally prints only the long vowels, and readers supply the rest. And the break before the final م is alef refusing to join, exactly as promised.

Your turn

- Read it: سلام — name each letter from the right, then say the word
- Write it: سلام — and let the run break after alef
- Say it: salâm

Before you move on

Which part of sin survives when it joins? (The teeth; the bowl is trimmed.)

15.6 ب — a bowl, and one dot underneath

Write سلام. Four letters, one break.

Script — the shape

Stroke order after Persian Online, How to Write Persian Characters, opening ب demonstration at 00:11–00:15 (Liberal Arts Instructional Technology Services, Univ. of Texas at Austin)
This order is attested, not standardised; the source records where it varies.

How ب is written, stroke by stroke

ب

A single shallow bowl, wider and flatter than the one on lâm, sitting on the line — and one dot below it.

Draw the bowl first, then lift and place the dot. That lift is the only one.

Its name is be and it says b.

Now the part worth more than the letter. This bowl is a skeleton that several letters share. On its own it means nothing; the dots decide which letter it is — how many, and whether they sit above or below.

That is why dots in Persian are not decoration and not optional. Move one dot from below to above and you have written a different letter. Your eye has to learn to look at the dots as hard as it looks at the shape.

Your turn

- Write it: ب — the shallow bowl, then one dot beneath it
- Say it: b

Before you move on

Is the bowl alone enough to identify a letter? (No — the dots decide.)

15.7 ت and ن — the same bowl, dotted differently

Write ب. Bowl, then one dot below.

Script — two dots above

Letter 1: stroke order after Persian Online, How to Write Persian Characters, ت demonstration at 00:22–00:27 (Liberal Arts Instructional Technology Services, Univ. of Texas at Austin)
Letter 2: stroke order after Persian Online, How to Write Persian Characters, ن demonstration at 02:37–02:43 (Liberal Arts Instructional Technology Services, Univ. of Texas at Austin)
This order is attested, not standardised; the source records where it varies.

How these letters are written, one after another, stroke by stroke: ت, ن

ت

The same bowl as be. Two dots, and they sit above it.

That is the entire difference, and it is a whole different letter: te, saying t.

Script — one dot above, and a deeper bowl

ن

One dot above — and a bowl that is noticeably deeper and rounder than be's, curving well below the line before coming back up.

Its name is nun and it says n.

Standing alone, nun's deeper bowl helps you. In the middle of a joined run the bowl gets trimmed like everyone else's, and then the dot is doing nearly all the work: one above is nun, two above is te, one below is be.

What you've built

Three letters, one shape:

ب — one dot below

ت — two dots above

ن — one dot above

You learned one bowl and got three letters out of it. That is the trade Persian keeps offering: fewer shapes than you feared, and dots you cannot afford to skim.

Your turn

- Write it: ب, then ت, then ن — same hand movement, different dots
- Say it: b, t, n

Before you move on

Which of the three has the deepest bowl? (nun.)

15.8 ه — the letter with four costumes

Write ت, then ن. Same bowl, different dots.

Script — the shape

How it is written — one unbroken stroke · 1 movement

Stroke order after Persian Online, How to Write Persian Characters, ه demonstration at 02:47–02:50 (Liberal Arts Instructional Technology Services, Univ. of Texas at Austin)
This order is attested, not standardised; the source records where it varies.

How ه is written, stroke by stroke

ه

A small round letter, standing on the line, no dots at all.

Its name is he. It says h at the start of a word — and at the end of a word it usually says nothing like an h: it carries a final e sound, the vowel that ends so many Persian words.

This letter will test what you learned about joining, because its four forms differ more than most:

alone: ه — at the start: هـ — in the middle: ـهـ — at the end: ـه

Do not try to memorise four shapes. Recognise the round body, notice where in the run it is sitting, and let the shape follow from that. Persian readers are not holding four pictures in mind either.

Your turn

- Write it: ه — small and round, no dots
- Say it: h at the front of a word; a soft e at the end of one

Before you move on

Does he carry any dots? (None.)

15.9 و — one shape, three jobs, and no hand offered to the left

Write هـ. Small, round, no dots.

Script — the shape

How و is written, stroke by stroke

A small loop at the top with a tail sweeping down and to the left, below the line. One movement.

Its name is vâv, and it is unusually hard-working. Depending on the word it is:

- the consonant v

- the long vowel u, as in English food
- the vowel o

You cannot tell which from the letter alone. You learn it with the word — and that is a fair trade, because it means Persian needs no separate letters for those vowels at all.

And vâv is a non-joiner, the second one this chapter has given you. Like alef, it takes the hand of the letter on its right and offers nothing to the left, so the run breaks after it.

Your turn

- Write it: و — the small loop, then the tail below the line
- Say it: v, then u, then o — one letter, three jobs

Before you move on

Can you tell from the shape alone whether vâv is v, u or o? (No — the word tells you.)

15.10 Practice — seven words you already knew, now read

Write your nine letters in a row, right to left, saying each name as you go.

Script — the words come back

Nothing new is taught here. Every word below is one this book already gave you to say, and every letter in them is one you can now write.

Read each from the right, naming its letters before you say it:

سلام

بله

نه

ممنون

نان

نام

ماه

salâm — bale — na — mamnun — nân — nâm — mâh.

Seven words. Nine letters. That ratio is the point: a small closed set of shapes unlocks far more than its own size, and it keeps doing so as the set grows.

Why it's said this way

Count the letters in بله and count the sounds in bale. Three letters, four sounds.

Persian normally does not write its short vowels. The long ones get letters — that is part of what alef and vâv are for — but the short a, e and o are left off the page, and the reader supplies them.

This sounds alarming and is not, for the same reason English readers cope with read and read: you are not decoding letter by letter for long. You recognise the word.

It does mean one thing, though, and it is worth accepting early. You cannot reliably sound out a Persian word you have never heard. Reading and listening have to grow together in this language, more tightly than in one that spells every vowel. That is why this book taught you these seven words by ear first, and is only now handing you the page.

What you've built this chapter

Nine letters, and three ideas that matter more than any of them:

- the page runs right to left, and your pen starts at the right edge
- letters join, changing shape by position — but the change is a trimming, not a new letter, and alef and vâv refuse to join to the left, which is what makes the gaps inside a word
- dots carry the identity — one bowl gave you ب, ت and ن

Nine of Persian's thirty-two letters. The remaining twenty-three are mostly more of what you have just done: familiar skeletons, re-dotted.

Your turn

- Read it: سلام بله نه ممنون — name the letters of each before saying it
- Write it: نان and نام — one letter apart, and check which
- Say it: mamnun, and count how many letters are written for it

Before you move on

Which two of your nine letters refuse to join to the left? (ا and و.)

15.11 ممنون · زن · دوست — three words the letters have caught up with

Say the word you have used for thank you since the first page. You have had it in your mouth far longer than you have had it on the page.

You'll want to know: the letters have caught up with the words

Three words you already say, now taken apart with letters you can name:

word		its letters
ممنون mamnun	thank you	م · م · ن · و · ن
زن zan	woman	ز · ن
دوست dust	friend	د · و · س · ت

Look at what is not there. Mamnun has an a you say and no a you read, because Persian leaves the short vowels off the page — the rule you were told on the very first word, now visible in a word you can spell. Dust has the opposite: the و is written, because a long u earns a letter.

Short vowels are heard and not written; long ones are both. That single sentence is most of what makes Persian readable.

Your turn

- Look: at ممنون and name each letter from the right
- Say it: zan — woman; then name its two letters
- Say it: dust — friend; then say which of its four letters is the long u

- Say it: mamnun — and say where the a you hear has gone on the page

Before you move on

Which word means thank you, and which vowel of it is unwritten? (ممنون — the short a.) Which two letters spell woman? (ز ن.) Which letter of دوست carries the long u? (و.) And what is the rule the three words share? (Short vowels are not written; long ones are.)

Chapter 16

One to Five, and the Words English Already Says

Modes: voice (6) eyes (1) Hands-free start: the first 6 of 7 lessons.

> By the end of this chapter: I can say, hear and recognise the Persian numbers one to five, write the one of them made only of letters I have been taught, and name the English cousin of each.
> Five numbers, five Indo-European roots and five everyday English cousins — retrieved shuffled rather than recited, with the one writable form written.

16.1 یک — one, and the first number this book has ever taught

> Read it: سلام and نان off the page, without the romanization
> Nine letters, and the words they finish.

You'll want to know first — one word

یک — yek — one

Fifteen chapters of names, verbs, kinship, the body and the sky, and not one number. That has a cost the book has been carrying quietly: no age, no price, no telephone number, no quantity, no time of day. It starts being paid here.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

یک continues Middle Persian ēk, from Proto-Iranian Haywah* and Indo-Iranian Háywas*, ultimately Indo-European óywos*, "one." That root did not stay in Iran. Sanskrit eka, Ancient Greek oios, Latin ūnus, French un, German ein and English one are all the same word, worn down differently. Of the ten numbers this slice teaches, nine have a cousin an English speaker already says every day — which makes the count the cheapest vocabulary in the whole book, not the most expensive.

Your turn

- Say it: yek — one
- Connect: yek ← óywos* → English one, Latin ūnus, Sanskrit eka

Before you move on

What does یک mean? (One.) Which everyday English word is the same root? (One.)
Sources: Wiktionary: یک; Omniglot, Numbers in Persian.

16.2 دو — two, and a letter doing its third job

Say yek, and the English word that is the same root.

You'll want to know first — one word

دو — do — two

Two letters. The second is و, the hard-working letter from the script chapter that can be v, u or o; here it is o, and the word tells you so.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

دو continues Middle Persian dō, from Proto-Iranian duwā*, from Indo-European dwoh*, "two." English two, Latin duo, Greek dýo and Sanskrit dvá are the same word.
Say do and two one after the other. Nothing has to be learned there; it has to be recognised.

Your turn

- Say it: do — two
- Connect: do ← dwoh* → English two, Latin duo
- Run through: yek, do

Before you move on

Which of و's three jobs is it doing in دو? (o.)
Sources: Wiktionary: دو; Omniglot, Numbers in Persian.

16.3 سه — three, and the first number the hand can make

Say yek, do.

You'll want to know first — one word

سه — se — three

س and ه. Both were taught in the script chapter, so this is the first number in the book you can write as well as say. Of the twelve numbers this slice covers, exactly two are in that position — the other is nine.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

سه continues Middle Persian sē, from Indo-European tréyes*, "three." English three, Latin trēs, Greek treîs and Sanskrit tri are the same word.
The Persian form looks further away than do did, and it is: the initial consonant and the r have both gone. Hearing se as three takes a moment where hearing do as two took none — that is worth noticing now, because the next two numbers are further still.

Your turn

- Say it: se — three
- Connect: se ← tréyes* → English three, Latin trēs

- Write it: سه — sin, then he. Right to left.
- Run through: yek, do, se

Before you move on

Which two numbers can this book write so far? (سه and, later, نه.)
Sources: Wiktionary: سه; Omniglot, Numbers in Persian.

16.4 چهار — four, and one consonant taking three different paths

Say se and its English cousin, then do.

You'll want to know first — one word

چهار — chahâr — four

Two syllables, and the long â of باران in the second.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

چهار continues Middle Persian čahār, from Proto-Iranian čathwārah* (EtymDB) and Indo-European k^wetwóres*, "four."
That opening k^w* is the interesting part, because three languages did three different things with it. Latin kept it whole: quattuor. English lost the lip-rounding and then the k itself softened to f: four. Persian pushed it forward to a ch. One sound, three descendants, and the numbers still line up.

Your turn

- Say it: chahâr — four
- Connect: chahâr ← k^wetwóres* → Latin quattuor, English four
- Run through: yek, do, se, chahâr

Before you move on

Which language kept the original kw whole? (Latin.)
Sources: Wiktionary: چهار; Omniglot, Numbers in Persian.

16.5 پنج — five, and the word you have already met on a map

Say chahâr, and what three languages did with its first sound.

You'll want to know first — one word

پنج — panj — five

پ is Persian's own letter, one of the four the alphabet added for sounds Arabic does not have.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

پنج continues Middle Persian panj, from Indo-European pénk*^{w}e, "five." Greek pénte, Latin quīnque and English five are the same word.
This one an English speaker has probably already met without knowing it. Punjab is panj + âb, "five waters" — the land of the five rivers. So is the fruit drink punch, named for its five ingredients. The number was in the language before the lesson was.

Your turn

- Say it: panj — five
- Connect: panj ← pénk*^{w}e → Greek pénte, Latin quīnque, English five
- Run through: yek, do, se, chahâr, panj — the whole first five

Before you move on

What does the panj in Punjab mean? (Five.)
Sources: Wiktionary: پنج; Omniglot, Numbers in Persian.

16.6 Payoff — one to five, out of order

Say panj, then yek.

Your turn

A run learned forwards is a rhyme. Break it four ways.

1. Hear each of the five named singly and out of order, and say what it is.
2. Count backwards from panj to yek.
3. Read it: the five printed shuffled — پنج، یک، چهار، دو سه — then say each
4. Write it: سه, the one of the five whose letters are already yours

Then say each number's English cousin: one, two, three, four, five. Every one of the five has one, and that is not a coincidence — it is the same set of words, five thousand years apart.

Before you move on

Source: Omniglot, Numbers in Persian.

16.7 یک دوست — counting the people you can name

Two person words, from memory: the one for woman, and the one for friend. Neither is a family role, which is what made them worth learning.

You'll want to know: numbers go in front, and nothing else changes

Put a number you now have in front of a person word you now have:

یک دوست yek dust	one friend
دو دوست do dust	two friends
se zan	three women

Read the middle column down and notice what stays still. دوست does not change between one friend and two, and neither does zan. Persian does not reach for a plural ending once a number has already said how many — the number has done that job, so the noun does not repeat it.

دوست is also the one to hold on to. It goes back to a root meaning to choose, so a friend in Persian is the one chosen — and the same root gave English choose.

Your turn

- Say it: one friend, then two friends — the noun does not move
- Say it: three women
- Say it: dust — and what a friend is, literally
- Run through: yek, do, se in front of dust, one after the other

Before you move on

How do you say two friends? (دو دوست do dust — the noun is unchanged.) Why is there no plural ending? (The number already said how many.) What does دوست mean literally? (The one chosen.) And which English word shares its root? (Choose.) And zan: which English word kept its root, narrowed to one woman? (Queen — and Greek kept the plain sense in gynecology.)

Chapter 17

Six to Ten, and One Sound Law

Modes: voice (5) eyes (1) Hands-free start: the first 3 of 6 lessons.

> By the end of this chapter: I can say, hear and recognise every Persian number from one to ten, write the two of them made only of letters I have been taught, and explain why haft begins with h where septem begins with s.
> Five more numbers, the Iranian s-to-h rule that explains one of them, the analogy that explains the next, and the whole run of ten shuffled.

17.1 شش — six, and the short vowel you cannot see

Count one to five, then five to one.

You'll want to know first — one word

شش — shesh — six

Two letters, and they are the same letter. The vowel between them is short, so Persian does not write it — which is the script chapter's rule doing exactly what it said it would: a Persian word can be read only once you have heard it.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

شش continues Middle Persian shash, from Indo-European swéḱs*, "six." English six, Latin sex, Greek héx and Sanskrit ṣaṣ are the same word.

Your turn

- Say it: shesh — six
- Connect: shesh ← swéḱs* → English six, Latin sex
- Run through: chahâr, panj, shesh

Before you move on

Sources: Wiktionary: شش; Omniglot, Numbers in Persian.

17.2 هفت — seven, and the rule behind it

Say shesh and its English cousin.

You'll want to know first — one word

هفت — haft — seven

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

هفت comes from Proto-Iranian haptá*, from Indo-European septm*, "seven." Latin septem, English seven and Sanskrit saptá all keep the s.
Persian does not, and that is not an accident about this word. Iranian turned Indo-European s into h at the front of a word, everywhere, and once you know that one change a great many Persian words stop looking foreign. Set the pairs side by side:

- Sanskrit saptá — Persian haft
- Sanskrit sindhu, "river" — Persian hind (and, through Persian, India)
- Sanskrit soma — Avestan haoma

This is the single most useful sound law in the language for a reader who knows any European one, and a number is where it is easiest to see.

Your turn

- Say it: haft — seven
- Connect: haft ← septm* → Latin septem, English seven
- Apply: s at the front becomes h — saptá → haft
- Run through: panj, shesh, haft

Before you move on

Sources: Wiktionary: هفت; Omniglot, Numbers in Persian.

17.3 هشت — eight, and a rule that does not apply

Say haft, and what Iranian did to every word-initial s.

You'll want to know first — one word

هشت — hasht — eight

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

هشت goes back to Indo-European oḱtṓw*, "eight" — Latin octō, Greek oktṓ, English eight. There is no s anywhere in that history, so the rule you learned one lesson ago cannot be what put the h on the front. What put it there was haft standing next to it. Seven and eight are said together more often than almost any other pair of words, and the h- of haft spread onto its neighbour. A rule and an exception, one lesson apart, and the exception is the more human of the two.

Your turn

- Say it: hasht — eight
- Connect: hasht ← oḱtṓw* → Latin octō, English eight
- Run through: shesh, haft, hasht

Before you move on

Sources: Wiktionary: هشت; Omniglot, Numbers in Persian.

17.4 نه — nine, and the word it is spelled exactly like

Say hasht, and why its h is there.

You'll want to know first — one word

نه — noh — nine

ن and ه. Both are yours from the script chapter, so this is the second of the twelve numbers you can write as well as say — the other was سه.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

نه continues Middle Persian noh, from Indo-European h1newn*, "nine." Latin novem, English nine and Sanskrit náva are the same word.
Now look at the spelling against a word from the opening chapter. نه is also na, "no" — the same two letters, because the vowel that tells them apart is short and Persian does not write short vowels. Only the sentence separates nine from no.
This is the clearest case in the book of the trade the script chapter named. Persian writes fewer signs than it says, and the reader pays for it exactly here.

Your turn

- Say it: noh — nine
- Connect: noh ← h1newn* → Latin novem, English nine
- Write it: نه — nun, then he
- Contrast: the same two letters said na are "no"

Before you move on

Sources: Wiktionary: نه; Omniglot, Numbers in Persian.

17.5 ده — ten, and the building block for nine more numbers

Say noh and haft, and what نه can also mean.

You'll want to know first — one word

ده — dah — ten

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

ده continues Middle Persian dah, from Indo-European dekm*, "ten." Latin decem (and through it decimal, December), English ten and Sanskrit dáśa are the same word.
Hold on to this one. Persian builds every number from eleven to nineteen by putting a unit in front of dah — yâz-dah, si-dah, chahâr-dah — so the next chapter costs one rule rather than nine words. Ten has to be learned before the teens can be, and now it is.

Your turn

- Say it: dah — ten
- Connect: dah ← dekm* → Latin decem, English ten
- Run through: haft, hasht, noh, dah

Before you move on

Sources: Wiktionary: ده; Omniglot, Numbers in Persian.

17.6 Payoff — one to ten

Count one to five, then say what Iranian did to word-initial s.

Your turn

1. Hear all ten named singly and out of order, and say each.
2. Count backwards from dah to yek.
3. Read it: the ten printed shuffled, then say each
4. Write it: سه and نه, the two whose letters the script chapter gave you
5. Say the English cousin of each of the ten. Every one has one.

Then group them by what happened to the first sound: haft shows the s-to-h rule, hasht borrowed its h from haft, and shesh kept its s because the rule only touches the front of a word.

Before you move on

Chapter 18

The Teens Are a Rule, Not Nine Words

Modes: 🚗 voice (5) 🚗 Hands-free start: all 5 lessons.

> By the end of this chapter: I can build any number from eleven to nineteen by putting a unit in front of dah, say twenty and a hundred, and write the tenth letter of this book.
> Three teens taught and six built from the rule, then the two round amounts a price actually names — and the one letter a hundred needs that no lesson yet teaches the hand to make.

18.1 یازده — eleven, and one rule for nine numbers

Count one to ten, then say dah on its own and what it means.

You'll want to know first — one word, and then a rule

یازده — yâzdah — eleven

Say it slowly and the ten is audible at the end: yâz + dah. The first piece is yek worn down; the second is the word for ten you learned in the last lesson.

That is the whole of the teens. Persian puts the unit in front of ten and stops:

12	davâz-dah — from do
14	chahâr-dah — chahâr unchanged
19	nuz-dah — from noh

Nine numbers, one rule, and the unit is a number you already have. This is why ten had to come first.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

yâzdah is inherited: it is usually traced to Middle Persian yāzdah, built from the old words for "one" and "ten", Middle Persian ēk and dah.

Your turn

- Say it: yâzdah — eleven
- Split: yâz + dah
- Build: chahâr + dah → chahârdah, fourteen

Before you move on

Sources: Wiktionary: یازده; Omniglot, Numbers in Persian.

18.2 سیزده — thirteen, and how far a unit can bend

Say yâzdah, split it in two, and build fourteen.

You'll want to know first — one word

سیزده — sizdah — thirteen

si + dah. The unit is se, with its vowel lengthened and darkened — and English does the same thing without anyone noticing: three becomes thir- in thirteen, and five becomes fif- in fifteen.

Listen past the bending, then, and hear what does not bend: the ten stays the same, on the end, every time.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

sizdah is inherited: it is usually traced to Middle Persian sēzdah, built from se, "three", and dah, "ten".

Your turn

- Say it: sizdah — thirteen
- Split: si + dah
- Compare: se → si, as English three → thir-

Before you move on

Sources: Wiktionary: سیزده; Omniglot, Numbers in Persian.

18.3 پانزده — fifteen, and the one irregularity worth naming

Say sizdah and split it, then say panj.

You'll want to know first — one word

پانزده — pânzdah — fifteen

pân + z + dah. There is an n in there that panj does not have in the place you would expect it, and there is a z that came from the j.

Sixteen does the same thing: shânzdah, from shesh. Fifteen and sixteen are the only two of the nine teens that bend this far, and they bend the same way — so it is one irregularity, met once, not two.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

pânzdah is inherited: it is usually traced to Middle Persian pānzdah, built from panj, "five", and dah, "ten".

Your turn

- Say it: pânzdah — fifteen
- Say it: shânzdah — sixteen, the same bend
- Run through: yâzdah, sizdah, pânzdah and the ten inside each

Before you move on

Sources: Wiktionary: پانزده; Omniglot, Numbers in Persian.

18.4 بیست and صد — twenty and a hundred

Say pânzdah and sizdah, and split each in two.

You'll want to know first — two words

بیست — bist — twenty

صد — sad — a hundred

Two words, taken together because a price names one or the other far more often than it names any of the eighteen numbers between them.

صد is two letters and it is the largest number in this book. Its first letter, ص, is one no lesson has taught the hand to make — it enters this book by eye only, the way most of the track's words have, and reading is what the number needs.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

بیست goes back to Indo-European wikmtih*, "twenty" — Latin vīgintī, Sanskrit vimshati.
صد goes back to kmtom*, "hundred" — Latin centum, Greek hekatón, English hundred. The Latin form is the one English borrowed twice over, in century and per cent, so a reader who has ever seen a percentage has already met sad's cousin.
The spelling is the joke: صد is written with a borrowed Arabic letter for a word that is not Arabic at all.

Your turn

- Say it: bist — twenty; sad — a hundred
- Connect: sad ← kmtom* → Latin centum, English hundred
- Run through: dah, bist, sad — the three round amounts

Before you move on

Sources: Wiktionary: صد; Omniglot, Numbers in Persian.

18.5 Payoff — one to twenty, and the hundred above it

Count one to ten, then say a hundred.

Your turn

Three of the nine teens were taught. Build the other six rather than recalling them.

1. From do, chahâr, haft, hasht and noh, build twelve, fourteen, seventeen, eighteen and nineteen by putting the unit in front of dah. Check: each against a printed list, and repair only what missed
2. Say sixteen, and say which taught number it bends like.
3. Count one to twenty straight through.
4. Hear twelve amounts named singly, from yek to sad, and say each.

The point of the chapter is that six of these nine numbers were never taught and you can say them anyway. That is what a rule buys and a word list does not.

Before you move on

Chapter 19

The Ten Persian Digits

Modes: 🚗 voice (1) ↙ pen (4) 🚗 Hands-free start: none of the 5 lessons.

> By the end of this chapter: I can read and write the ten Persian digits, read a price, a page number and a telephone number off an Iranian page, and say which way a number runs inside a right-to-left line.
> Ten signs across four lessons, grouped by what makes each pair hard: the reversed direction, the one-tooth pair, the three Arabic draws differently, and the mirror pair.

19.1 ۰ ۱ — two digits, and a direction that reverses

Which way does a Persian line run? Say yek.

Script — the shapes, and the direction

How these digits are written, one after another, stroke by stroke: ٠, ۱

٠ — sefr, zero ۱ — yek, one

Persian has its own ten digit signs, and every price ticket, telephone number and page number in Iran is written in them. A reader who can say yek and cannot read ۱ still cannot read a price.

٠ is a dot, not a ring. Fix that first, because a European eye reads a dot as a decimal point — and Persian's nine is the ring.

Now the part no earlier chapter has had to say: numbers run left to right, inside a line that runs right to left. Ten is ۱٠ — one, then zero, in the European order — while the words around it move the other way. The page changes direction at the number and changes back after it.

Your turn

- Write it: ٠ — a dot; ۱ — a stroke
- Read it: ۱٠ — dah, ten, left to right

Before you move on

Sources: Unicode Arabic chart; Omniglot, Numbers in Persian.

19.2 ۲ ۳ — one tooth apart

Write ۰ and ۱, then read ۱۰.

Script — the shapes

How these digits are written, one after another, stroke by stroke: ۲, ۳

۲ — do, two ۳ — se, three

۳ is ۲ with one more tooth. That is the whole difference, and it is small enough that the two have to be written as a pair rather than one at a time — say do and se aloud as the hand makes them and the shapes stop competing.

Your turn

- Write it: ۲, then ۳ beside it
- Read it: ۱۲, ۱۳, ۲۳, left to right

Before you move on

Sources: Unicode Arabic chart; Omniglot, Numbers in Persian.

19.3 ۴ ۵ ۶ — the three Persian keeps for itself

Write ۲ and ۳, and say which has the extra tooth.

Script — the shapes

How these digits are written, one after another, stroke by stroke: ۴, ۵, ۶

۴ — chahâr, four ۵ — panj, five ۶ — shesh, six

These three are the reason this chapter exists as more than a list.

Seven of the ten digits are drawn the same way in Persian and in Arabic. ۴, ۵ and ۶ are not: Arabic writes those three with quite different shapes. A reader who picked up the digits from an Arabic book will read an Iranian price wrongly at exactly these three places and nowhere else.

If you drill three of the ten harder than the rest, drill these.

Your turn

- Write it: ۴, ۵, ۶, saying chahâr, panj, shesh
- Read it: ۱۴, ۱۵, ۱۶, left to right

Before you move on

Sources: Unicode Arabic chart; Omniglot, Numbers in Persian.

19.4 ۷ ۸ ۹ — a mirror pair, and the ring

Write ۴, ۵, ۶ — the three Arabic draws differently.

Script — the shapes

How these digits are written, one after another, stroke by stroke: ۷, ۸, ۹

۷ — haft, seven ۸ — hasht, eight ۹ — noh, nine

۷ and ۸ are mirror images of each other, one opening upward and one downward. Write them as a pair, every time, and the mirror stops being a problem — the same trick that worked on ۲ and ۳.

۹ is a ring with a tail, and this is where a dot-shaped zero pays off. Had ۰ been a ring too, the page would carry two rings and no way to separate them.

Ten signs, four lessons. The set is closed.

Your turn

- Write it: ۷ and ۸ as a pair, then ۹
- Run through: ۰ ۱ ۲ ۳ ۴ ۵ ۶ ۷ ۸ ۹ once, slowly

Before you move on

Sources: Unicode Arabic chart; Omniglot, Numbers in Persian.

19.5 Payoff — reading the figures

Count one to twenty, then say which way digits run inside a Persian line.

Your turn

1. Read it: all ten signs shuffled, then say each as a Persian word
2. Read it: ۱۰, ۱۱, ۲۰ and ۱۰۰, then say each — dah, yâzdah, bist, sad
3. Hear ten amounts named. Write it: each in Persian figures
4. Write it: the ten signs from dictation, out of order, and check ۴, ۵ and ۶ against the models rather than against memory

Say what a reader can now do that could not be done four chapters ago: read a price, a page number and a telephone number off an Iranian page.

Before you move on

Chapter 20

Which One: the Ordinals

Modes: 🚗 voice (4) 🚗 Hands-free start: all 4 lessons.

> By the end of this chapter: I can say first, second, third and fourth, build the ordinal of any number I can count to, and write two of them from memory.
> One borrowed ordinal at the head of the series, one ending that makes all the rest, and the two forms whose letters chapter 15 already gave.

20.1 اول — first, and the one ordinal Persian did not build

Read it: ۱, ۵ and ۱۰, then say yek

You'll want to know first — one word

اول — avval — first

Counting says how many. Ordering says which one, and a floor number, a date on a notice, a chapter heading and a queue all need the second.

Three letters — ا, و, ل — and every one of them was taught in the script chapter, so this is the third word in the book you can write from memory without meeting a new sign.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

اول is Arabic, from the root ʾ-w-l. Persian did not build it from yek. Every other ordinal in the language is built from its own number, as the next lesson shows. So the series opens with a borrowed word and continues with native ones — the same shape English has in first and second, which are not built from one and two either, before third, fourth, fifth fall into line.

Your turn

- Say it: avval — first
- Write it: اول — alef, vâv, lam
- Contrast: yek counts, اول orders

Before you move on

Sources: Wiktionary: اول; Omniglot, Numbers in Persian.

20.2 دوم and سوم — second, third, and one ending

Say avval, and where it came from. Then say do and se.

You'll want to know first — two words and a rule

دوم — dovvom — second

سوم — sevvom — third

The rule is one ending: م‌ـ, -om, on the cardinal. do + -om → dovvom; se + -om → sevvom. The consonant doubles at the join, which is the only thing you have to hear.

سوم is written س، و، م — three letters, all yours from the script chapter. That makes it the fourth word in this book you can write unaided, after se, noh and avval, whose written forms the script chapter already gave.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

dovvom and sevvom are built from the inherited numbers do and se with the ordinal ending -om (EtymDB); do continues Middle Persian dō (EtymDB).

Your turn

- Say it: dovvom — second; sevvom — third
- Split: do + -om, se + -om
- Write it: سوم — sin, vâv, mim

Before you move on

Sources: Wiktionary: سوم; Omniglot, Numbers in Persian.

20.3 چهارم — fourth, with nothing bending

Say the ordinal ending, then dovvom and sevvom.

You'll want to know first — one word

چهارم — chahârom — fourth

chahâr + -om, and nothing happens at the join. panjom, "fifth," is the same: the cardinal ends in a consonant, so the ending simply follows it.

dovvom and sevvom doubled a consonant only because their cardinals end in a vowel. Two and three are the exception; four onwards is the rule, all the way up. dahom is "tenth", bistom is "twentieth", sadom is "hundredth."

So a reader who has twelve cardinals and one ending has twelve ordinals, minus the borrowed first.

The word, taken apart — and its English cousins

chahârom is built from chahâr, "four", with the ordinal ending -om (EtymDB); chahâr is inherited, from Middle Persian čahār (EtymDB).

Your turn

- Say it: chahârom — fourth
- Build: panj + -om → panjom, fifth
- Build: dah + -om → dahom, tenth

Before you move on

Sources: Wiktionary: چهارم; Omniglot, Numbers in Persian.

20.4 Payoff — which one

Count one to twenty. Read it: ۷, ۱۲ and ۱۰۰

Your turn

1. Say the first four in order, then out of order.
2. Build, do not recall: fifth, seventh, tenth, twentieth, hundredth, from the cardinals and the ending.
3. Say which one of the whole series is not built that way, and where it came from.
4. Write it: اول and سوم from memory — both are made entirely of letters the script chapter taught
5. Use one: name the floor a room is on, and the day of the month a notice gives.

Chapter 21

Reading — Words, Answers, and the Figures

Modes: eyes (3) Hands-free start: none of the 3 lessons.

> By the end of this chapter: I can read a Persian word, an answer and a figure off a page, without anyone saying them first.
> The ten digits read as amounts rather than drawn as shapes — the first Persian a traveller can take off a page without knowing a single letter.

21.1 (reading) — six words, nothing said first

You have written every letter in every one of these. Not one word is new, and not one shape inside them is new either.

What is new is that nobody says them before you read them.

Read this

ماه نان نه بله ممنون سلام

Read down the list once. Do not take each word apart — look at the whole shape and let it arrive.
Again, and notice which came at once and which you had to unpick. Both are fine. The difference is what practice removes.

What to know first

Persian joins its letters, so a word is not five shapes standing in a row. It is one shape.

That is why reading a word cold is a different skill from writing it. Writing, you make the joins one at a time and know what is coming. Reading, the joins are already made and the whole word has to land at once.

Look at نان and نه. Both open with the same letter, and the difference is at the end, which is exactly where a reader is most likely to stop looking.

Your turn

- Say it: the six words down the list, once, without stopping

Twice through:

Before you move on

How many of the six were new? (None.)
Which two open with the same letter? (نان and نه.)

21.2 (reading) — the answers, on the page

The last lesson gave you six words. These are six you would answer with.

Nothing here is new. What is new is meeting them where nobody is speaking.

Read this

سوم اول سلام ممنون نه بله

Read it: the six lines down once, without stopping
Read it: the six lines again, and notice the list changes halfway
The first four are things you say to a person. The last two are things you read off a door.

What to know first

اول and سوم are the two you are most likely to meet written before you ever meet them spoken: a floor, a platform, a queue.

That is the argument for reading them now. An answer you can only recognise by ear is one you can only give when somebody asks out loud. The same words on a sign do not wait for you.

Six lines, and the last two are the ones a street will hand you first.

Your turn

- Say it: the six lines, once, in order, without stopping

Twice through:

Before you move on

How many of the six were new? (None.)
Which two would you read off a door? (اول and سوم.)

21.3 (reading) — the figures

Six words, then six answers. These are not words at all.

You drew every one of them. Reading them is the same ten signs coming the other way.

Read this

۰ ۱ ۲ ۳ ۴ ۵ ۶ ۷ ۸ ۹ ۱۰ ۲۰ ۱۰۰

Read it: across each line once, without stopping
Read it: the lines again, and this time take the last three as amounts rather than as signs
Ten. Twenty. A hundred.

What to know first

These ten signs are the only Persian most travellers read before they read any word at all. A price, a floor, a platform, a phone number: none of them waits for you to know the letters.

Notice also which way they run. The digits go left to right inside a number even though the words around them run right to left, so ۱۰۰ is a one and two zeros in the order you already expect.

That is the whole trick, and it is why a figure is the first thing a reader can take from a Persian page.

Your turn

- Say it: the six lines aloud, once, without stopping

Twice through:

Before you move on

How many of the ten signs were new? (None.)
Which way does a Persian number run? (Left to right, inside a line that runs the other way.)

Letters That Never Join Forward

22.1 ر (re) — the letter that ends چطور

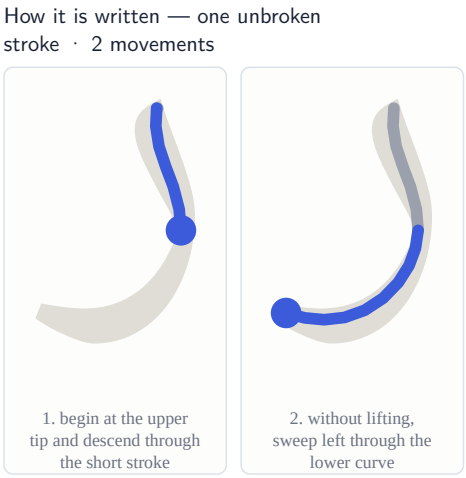

> Before the new one: write ه and و once each, and name them.
> Now say چطور (chetor), "how". You have read it for a long time. This lesson takes one letter out of it and puts it in your hand.

Script you'll notice: ر

ر — re, the sound r.

It ends چطور (chetor), "how", from "how are you?". ر is a non-connector, like ا and و, which you already write: it joins the letter before it but never the one after, so a small gap always follows it.

Writing: ر

How ر is written, stroke by stroke

22.2 ز (ze) — the letter that opens زبان

Before the new one: write و and ر once each, and name them.

Now say زبان (zabân), "language". You have read it for a long time. This lesson takes one letter out of it and puts it in your hand.

Script you'll notice: ز

ز — ze, the sound z.

It opens زبان (zabân), "language", the thing you are learning. It is ر, from the last lesson, with one dot above, and like ر it never joins the letter after it.

Writing: ز

22.3 د (dâl) — the letter inside خدا

Before the new one: write ر and ز once each, and name them.

Now say خدا (khodâ), "God". You have read it for a long time. This lesson takes one letter out of it and puts it in your hand.

Script you'll notice: د

د — dâl, the sound d.

It is inside خدا (khodâ), the first half of the farewell حافظ خدا. It is the third letter that never joins forward: after د, as after ر and ا, the pen lifts and the next letter starts fresh.

23.1 ح (he-ye jimi) — the letter that opens حال

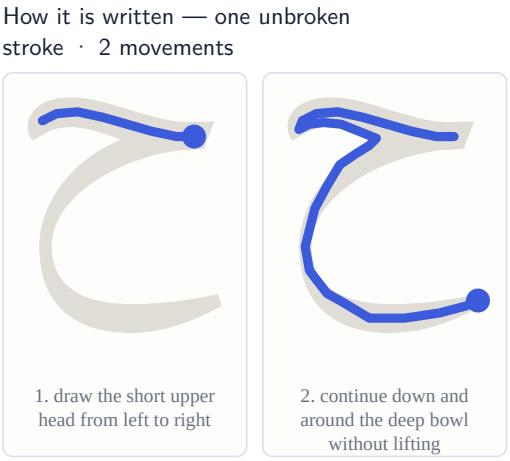

> Before the new one: write ز and د once each, and name them.
> Now say حال (hâl), "state, how you are". You have read it for a long time. This lesson takes one letter out of it and puts it in your hand.

Script you'll notice: ح

ح — he-ye jimi, the sound h.

It opens حال (hâl), the "how you are" in حالت چطور است؟. Persian already has an h, ه, which you write; this second one came in with Arabic words and sounds the same. Its name, he-ye jimi, means "the h shaped like jim": a short head and a deep bowl, with no dots.

23.2 ج (jim) — the letter that ends پنج

Before the new one: write د and ح once each, and name them.

Now say پنج (panj), "five". You have read it for a long time. This lesson takes one letter out of it and puts it in your hand.

Script you'll notice: ج

ج — jim, the sound j.

It ends پنج (panj), "five". It is ح, from the last lesson, with one dot below the head.

Writing: ج

Put your pen on ج and follow its line. Copy the shape you can see — slowly, and larger than it is printed.

> This book does not yet tell you where to start this letter or which way to travel. It is not written down here until it can be written down with a source. Copying what is in front of you needs no such source, and it is how the shape gets into your hand in the meantime.

23.4 چ (che) — the letter that opens چیست

Before the new one: write ج and خ once each, and name them.

Now say چیست (chist), "what is?". You have read it for a long time. This lesson takes one letter out of it and puts it in your hand.

Script you'll notice: چ

چ — che, the sound ch.

It opens چیست (chist), "what is?", one of your first questions. It is one of the four letters Persian added to the Arabic alphabet: the same skeleton as ح, with three dots below.

Writing: چ

> Before the new one: write خ and چ once each, and name them.
> Now say پرسیدن (porsidan), "to ask". You have read it for a long time. This lesson takes one letter out of it and puts it in your hand.

Script you'll notice: پ

پ — pe, the sound p.

It opens پرسیدن (porsidan), "to ask". It is ب with three dots below instead of one, another letter Persian added to the Arabic alphabet, because Arabic has no p.

Writing: پ

How پ is written, stroke by stroke

Which letter is this — ظ? (zâ, z.) Which word did it come from? (حافظ, hâfez, “guardian”.)

Chapter 26

Letters From Thinking and Coming

Modes: eyes (2) pen (3) Hands-free start: none of the 5 lessons.

> By the end of this chapter: I can write fe, ghaf and alef with madd, and I have now written every letter the words of this book use.
> Complete the last lesson of chapter 26: I can write fe, ghaf and alef with madd, and I have now written every letter the words of this book use.

26.1 ف (fe) — the letter that opens فکر

Before the new one: write ط and ظ once each, and name them.

Now say فکر کردن (fekr kardan), "to think". You have read it for a long time. This lesson takes one letter out of it and puts it in your hand.

Script you'll notice: ف

ف — fe, the sound f.

It opens فکر (fekr), "thought", in فکر کردن. A small closed head on a broad bowl, with one dot above.

Writing: ف

Stroke order after Persian Online, How to Write Persian Characters, ف demonstration at 02:09–02:13 (Liberal Arts Instructional Technology Services, Univ. of Texas at Austin)
This order is attested, not standardised; the source records where it varies.

How ف is written, stroke by stroke

- 1. start here: loop clockwise around the small closed head
- 2. continue left through the broad bowl without lifting
- 3. lift once, then place the upper dot last — and only now lift

Pen lifts: 1.

Stroke order is one attested teaching order; hands and teachers vary. Source: Persian Online, How to Write Persian Characters, ف demonstration at 02:09–02:13 (Liberal Arts Instructional Technology Services, Univ. of Texas at Austin).

Your turn

- Look: at فکر کردن and point at ف inside it
- Trace it: ف three times, saying f as you finish each one
- Write it: ظ, then ف, from memory
- Read it: فکر کردن aloud once more

Before you move on

Which letter is this — ف? (fe, f.) Which word did it come from? (کردن فکر, fekr kardan, "to think".)

26.2 ق (ghâf) — the letter inside خوشوقتم

Before the new one: write ظ and ف once each, and name them.

Now say خوشوقتم (khoshvaghtam), "pleased to meet you". You have read it for a long time. This lesson takes one letter out of it and puts it in your hand.

Script you'll notice: ق

ق — ghâf, a gh made far back in the throat.

It is inside خوشوقتم (khoshvaghtam), "pleased to meet you". Its head is the head of ف, from the last lesson, but it carries two dots, and standing alone its bowl dips below the line.

Writing: ق

How ق is written, stroke by stroke

- 1. start here: loop counterclockwise around the small closed head

- 2. continue down and left through the deep bowl without lifting
- 3. lift once, then place the upper-right dot
- 4. lift again, then place the upper-left dot — and only now lift

Pen lifts: 2.

Stroke order is one attested teaching order; hands and teachers vary. Source: Persian Online, How to Write Persian Characters, ق demonstration at 02:14–02:18 (Liberal Arts Instructional Technology Services, Univ. of Texas at Austin).

Your turn

- Look: at خوشوقتم and point at ق inside it
- Trace it: ق three times, saying gh as you finish each one
- Write it: ف, then ق, from memory
- Read it: خوشوقتم aloud once more

Before you move on

Which letter is this — ق? (ghâf, gh.) Which word did it come from? (خوشوقتم, khoshvaghtam, "pleased to meet you".)

26.3 آ (alef-e madd) — the alef that opens آمدن

Before the new one: write ف and ق once each, and name them.

Now say آمدن (âmadan), "to come". You have read it for a long time. This lesson takes one letter out of it and puts it in your hand.

Script you'll notice: آ

آ — alef with a madd, the long â at the start of a word.

It opens آمدن (âmadan), "to come". It is ا, which you already write, wearing a small wavy hat. A plain ا at the start of a word says a short a; the hat makes it a long â.

Writing: آ

Put your pen on آ and follow its line. Copy the shape you can see — slowly, and larger than it is printed.

> This book does not yet tell you where to start this letter or which way to travel. It is not written down here until it can be written down with a source. Copying what is in front of you needs no such source, and it is how the shape gets into your hand in the meantime.

Your turn

- Look: at آمدن and point at آ inside it
- Trace it: آ three times, saying â as you finish each one
- Write it: ق, then آ, from memory
- Read it: آمدن aloud once more

Before you move on

Which letter is this — آ? (alef-e madd, â.) Which word did it come from? (آمدن, âmadan, "to come".)

26.4 (eighteen letters) — Eighteen letters, eighteen words — a first pass

Write the letter that opens زبان, then the one that opens خدا.

Your turn

letter	name	the word it came from
ر	re	چطور chetor

ف	fe	فکر کردن fekr kardan
ق	ghâf	خوشوقتم khoshvaghtam
آ	alef-e madd	آمدن âmadan

- Say it: each word in the table, then write the letter it gave you without looking
- Write it: س beside ص, ت beside ط, and ز beside ظ, and say each pair aloud: same sound, two spellings
- Write it: ک beside گ, and ف beside ق

Before you move on

Which letters here never join to the letter after them? (ر ز د, and آ.)

Chapter 27

Head, Ear, Nose, Mouth, Tooth

Chapter 287

Writing — My Own Line

Modes: ↙ pen (1) 🚗 Hands-free start: none (1 lesson).

> By the end of this chapter: I can write one line of Persian about myself from words I know, with no model to copy, and check every dot before anything else.
> Complete FA-W287-khat-e-khodam: one line chosen rather than copied, with the dots checked letter by letter.

287.1 My own line — the first Persian writing with no model

> Everything you have written so far had something to reach for: a letter to trace, a word to copy, a voice to take down.
> This does not. You choose the words, from a supply that is closed: only what this book has taught you.

Writing — controlled composition

Write one line about yourself in Persian script, right to left: your name, and how you are today. Every dot and every join is now yours to place.

There is no Persian model, word bank, or romanization on this page. Choose the pieces yourself and put them in Persian order. If your name needs a letter you have not yet written, write the rest and check only the letters you own. This first composition is untimed: finish the line before you look back at any earlier lesson.

Your turn — check the dots first

Copying hid a decision from you, because the model always had the right dots. In Persian script a dot is part of the letter, not a mark on top of it. ب and پ share one body: one dot below, or three. Move a dot or drop one and you have written a different letter, and often a different word.

And ی changes its coat: two dots below at the start or in the middle of a word, and no dots when it ends one. Your line may end a word on it.

Read your line back, letter by letter, and count the dots on each one before you check anything else. Repair the first wrong dot, then write the whole line once more from meaning.

Before you move on

What separates ب from پ? (Only the dots: one below, or three below.)
How many dots does ی carry at the end of a word? (None.)
One chosen line closes this writing rung. It does not prove A1 attainment, readiness, human validation, or completion of the timed writing task that comes next.

Chapter 288

Writing — With A Clock

Modes: ↙ pen (1) 🚗 Hands-free start: none (1 lesson).

> By the end of this chapter: I can fill in a short practical form in Persian script against a three-minute clock, and I know what this track's A1 writing paper asks for.
> Complete FA-W288-ba-saat: all six form fields in Persian script before the three-minute timer rings, then stop.

288.1 The same writing, with a clock

> You wrote your own line with as long as you liked. A task you can only do untimed is not yet a task you can do.
> This page will not show you any copyable Persian answer. Put away the earlier lessons, romanization, dictionaries, translators, and spell-checkers.

You'll want to know — what the A1 paper is

This book found no widely used international A1 writing paper for Persian. SAMFA, the Iranian exam this book names as its far destination, is one academic test: its writing section is two essays in one hour, and the provider notice this book checked maps it to no CEFR level at all. So there is no SAMFA A1 paper to rehearse.

This book's A1 writing paper is therefore its own, modelled on what the Council of Europe's framework expects of A1 writing: a form with personal details, and a short, simple message. It runs 20 minutes: a practical form, then a 30 to 40 word Persian message to a named reader. Today you rehearse the form, for three minutes.

Writing — timed assessment production

One practical form — three minutes

Set a three-minute timer. Complete all six fields in Persian script for a new neighbourhood reading group. Write one short answer in every field, right to left. Start the timer when you begin the first field; leave any unfinished field as evidence when it rings.

1. Your name
2. How you are today
3. One person in your family
4. One drink you would like at the meeting
5. One thing you will bring
6. A goodbye

When the three-minute timer rings, stop. Record the number of completed fields. An honest short attempt is more useful than a perfect untimed one.

Before you move on

Spend at most one minute looking at this first attempt. Check the dots and the joins in one field, note one field to practise next, and do not rewrite the timed answer. Keep the page as evidence.
One fact about the full assessment changes how you study. Its four papers are each out of 100, and you need 60 on every one in the same sitting. Nothing averages: strong reading cannot carry weak writing. And one of writing's four scored dimensions is Persian orthographic control, so a missing dot costs marks.
This checkpoint is not the complete A1 writing paper, which still needs its mocks, rubric, calibration, and human review. It does not establish A1 attainment, readiness, completeness, or human validation.

Chapter 289

Writing — Four Lines, And The Gap Inside A Word

Modes: ↙ pen (1) 🚗 Hands-free start: none (1 lesson).

> By the end of this chapter: I can write four connected lines of Persian to a named reader, setting one thing against another with vali and giving a reason with chon.
> Complete FA-W289-chahar-khat: four lines to one reader, at least one with vali and one with chon, then check the spacing around every vav.

289.1 Four lines, and the gap that sits inside a word

> The last lesson asked for writing finished on time. This one asks for writing that holds together.
> Pick one person who will read it: a friend, by name.

You'll want to know — two joiners, one letter that will not join

Connected writing is not longer writing. Four short lines can be connected; one long line can fail to be. What makes it connected is that a sentence stops standing on its own.

You hold two joiners. ولی sets one thing against another. چون gives the reason.

And both of them carry و, the letter that takes the hand of the letter on its right and offers nothing to the left. So each word breaks open after it: و then لی, and چو then ن. A Persian word can have a gap inside it.

That makes your spacing part of the spelling. The gap between words has to be clearly wider than the break inside one. Make them equal and a reader cannot tell whether ولی is one word or two.

Writing — connected composition

Write four lines to the person you picked, right to left.

At least one line must use ولی. At least one must use چون to give a reason.

Use only words you already write. This lesson adds no vocabulary; the whole exercise is the joining, and a simpler familiar line is better than an invented one. This attempt is untimed.

Before you move on

Cover your first line and read the second alone. Does it still make complete sense without the first? If it does, you wrote a list, like the form one lesson ago.

Then find every و you wrote. Is the break after it smaller than the space between your words? It should be.

Four untimed lines close this writing rung. They are not the 30 to 40 word message of the full A1 paper, and they do not prove A1 attainment, readiness, or human validation.

Pronunciation & Script Reference

A reference, not a chapter. Look up a sound when a lesson names it; do not memorize this page first. The lessons introduce Persian script inside language the learner can already understand, one word-sized pattern at a time.

This track uses a learner romanization: â marks long a; u marks the long vowel in mamnun. Romanization is temporary scaffolding. Train your eye on the Persian form and gradually cover the Latin line.

The script in three facts

1. Read right to left (`rtl`). Words and sentences begin at the right edge.
2. Most letters join, and their shape responds to position. Some letters do not connect leftward to the next letter. In سلام, ا creates the visible break before final م.
3. Short vowels are normally unwritten (`short-vowels-unwritten`). Learn the vowel pattern with the word. The long vowels are represented with ا â, و u, and ی i.

Persian has no uppercase/lowercase distinction. Its alphabet adds پ p, چ ch, ژ zh, and گ g to the inherited Arabic inventory; the lessons will introduce them only when a useful word needs them.

Sound ids used by the starter lessons

- Sound id: `rtl`
  What to do: start at the right edge and follow the word leftward
  First anchor: سلام salâm

- Sound id: `long-a`
  What to do: hold ا as a steady â, near the vowel in "father"
  First anchor: سلام salâm
- Sound id: `long-u`
  What to do: hold و as u, near "oo" in "food," without an English off-glide
  First anchor: ممنون mamnun
- Sound id: `long-i`
  What to do: hold ی as long i in the learned word
  First anchor: چیست chist
- Sound id: `short-vowels-unwritten`
  What to do: supply learned a, e, or o even when no separate vowel letter appears
  First anchor: بله bale, نه na
- Sound id: `ezafe-e`
  What to do: say a light linking -e after a noun before its owner or description; ordinary text often leaves it unmarked
  First anchor: اسمِ من esm-e man
- Sound id: `sh`
  What to do: read three-dotted ش as sh
  First anchor: شما shomâ
- Sound id: `persian-che`
  What to do: read Persian چ as ch
  First anchor: چیست chist
- Sound id: `kh`
  What to do: make خ farther back than English h; a gentle approximation is acceptable first
  First anchor: خوب khub
- Sound id: `gh`
  What to do: use the modern Iranian Persian voiced back-of-the-mouth sound for غ
  First anchor: خوشوقتم khoshvaghtam
- Sound id: `vav-o`
  What to do: let و carry the learned o value in this word
  First anchor: چطور chetor

  What to do: recognize ؟ at the left end of a right-to-left question
  First anchor: چیست؟ شما اسم
- Sound id: `alef-madde`
  What to do: read آ — alef under a wavy madde — as a word-initial long â
  First anchor: آمدن âmadan
- Sound id: `persian-gaf`
  What to do: read گ gâf as English g in "go"; it is a Persian addition to the Arabic set
  First anchor: گفتن goftan
- Sound id: `persian-pe`
  What to do: read پ pe as English p; a ب shape with three dots beneath, and the third of Persian's four additions
  First anchor: پرسیدن porsidan
- Sound id: `silent-vav`
  What to do: after خ and before ا, leave و unpronounced — it is written, never said
  First anchor: خواندن khândan
- Sound id: `ze`
  What to do: read ز as English z; an ordinary letter from the inherited Arabic set
  First anchor: زبان zabân
- Sound id: `heh-e`
  What to do: read a word-final ه as the vowel -e, not as a consonant
  First anchor: ستاره setâre

Read the current word before the whole alphabet

- سلام gives س ل ا م, right-to-left direction, joining, and long â.
- ممنون reuses م, adds ن و, and assigns و its long-u job in this word.
- بله and نه make the missing short vowels visible by contrast: the spelling supplies a consonantal frame; the learned word supplies a/e.
- اسم من ... است recombines familiar letters and adds one spoken grammar cue, ezafe -e. The cue is often heard but not printed.

- شما, چیست, and خوشوقتم add sh, Persian چ, and the back sounds in خ/غ only inside the name exchange.
- چطور شما حال است؟ reuses ezafe and the Persian question mark; چطور gives و its learned o value, while خوبم returns to long-u و.
- خدا reuses خ and long-â ا; حافظ adds a clear initial h and a final ظ pronounced z in modern Persian. The complete farewell is normally joined in Persian as خداحافظ.
- بودن, رفتن, and دانستن need no new letters at all; the verb chapter adds only آ (alef wearing a madde, for a word opening on long â) inside آمدن, and گ gâf inside گفتن — the second of the four Persian additions گ ژ چ پ the learner has now met.
- The requests, family, and body chapters need only one new letter across all twelve words: ز ze, an ordinary member of the inherited Arabic set, inside زبان zabân. Every other word in those three chapters — پا, دست, چشم, دختر, برادر, پدر, مادر, کلید, چای, نان, آب — reuses letters already met.
- The next fourteen words — ستاره, ماه, خورشید, آسمان, کتاب, در, دل, نام, دوست, زن, مرد, پسر, خواهر, باران — need no new letters at all, only one new habit: ستاره's final ه carries the vowel -e rather than a consonant, the sound id `heh-e`.

One spelling symbol can do more than one job in later words—especially و and ی—so read from the word and context rather than assigning each shape one English value forever.
